

Hope to ease tensions Teachers meet with school committee tonight

by Arlene Surprenant
Both sides in a teacher contract dispute have hopes that a meeting early tonight (Dec. 3) will help resolve some of their differences, ease tensions, and afford a way to settle their contract. Though Wilmington School Committee Chairman Robert Peterson optimistically predicted "we're going to wrap it up soon," no final decision is expected to be made.

The invitation to meet with the entire board, sans attorneys, was first extended by Peterson November 17. The majority of his own committee balked, however, when members of the teachers' association (WTA) only agreed to a meeting without the presence of Superintendent Robert Horan.

"I don't see how we can meet without the legal executive officer of the school committee. It's against all precedent," said Bridget Zukas last week, adding "I would call this an insult to our superintendent." She was backed by fellow members Shirley Callan and Anthony Accardi, who said they needed Horan's expertise.

Though he didn't say much during last Tuesday's brief discussion, Horan later told the Town Crier "the school committee should use all the resources they paid for and I'm one of them."

One source in the WTA said part of the reason they were reluctant to meet with Horan present was a feeling that Horan had formulated many of the conditions in the bargaining package and they wanted to hear what committee members had to say on their own. Peterson and Mitchell Spirits felt, "in the spirit of cooperation," they should meet and caucus with Horan afterward. However, the majority ruled and late Monday the WTA executive committee agreed to a meeting with both the school committee and Horan.

In an interview Tuesday, WTA Vice-President Beverly Shay said she, too, was optimistic about a successful outcome because "we're meeting with more of the board than the sub-committee and we'll have more dialogue back and forth."

"They need to talk to us," she continued, adding that, "this way, they won't have to guess what we want; they'll know."

What Shay hopes will be clarified in tonight's meeting is the association's stand on Agency Fee and Just Cause.

"We want them to understand that an agency fee is not a closed shop. An agency fee is a fee paid by teachers who don't belong to a union. It helps the union bargain their raises and represent them in grievances. It isn't fair for them to receive our representation in disputes with administration and getting them raises without paying anything whatsoever," said Shay.

Just cause, she explained, still allows administrators to dismiss incompetent teachers. "All it really means is no teacher can be dismissed without just cause."

"It's really a matter of interpretation, as most things are," Shay said, adding that, "the contract needs policing and, in that sense, this protects us."

Rezoning succeeds
Kevin McDonald displays a map of zoning in the Andover Street area, where he plans to build a residential subdivision. He was successful in having the land rezoned from R60 to R20 at Monday night's special town meeting.

The school's PAC is running "Santa's Secret Shop" where students can buy small gift items in a controlled setting. Beth Heubner, left, answers some questions for Danielle Mace.

Temporary restraining order for Shamrock

by Arlene Surprenant
Shamrock Liquors, Inc., received a temporary restraining order on their 14-day suspension last Wednesday from Judge Andrew Meyer. Though the Wilmington Board of Selectmen ordered the store closed December 1 because of a liquor license violation, the order allows Shamrock to remain open until an appeal is heard.

In a complaint filed in Middlesex Superior Court in Cambridge, Shamrock claimed the decision of the selectmen to suspend its license is based upon an error of law and is a violation of Shamrock's constitutional right to due process. Shamrock also claimed the decision is beyond the authority of the board of selectmen and is unsupported by substantial evidence.

Town Counsel Alan Altman will go to court this Friday to see whether that restraining order can be dissolved. Shamrock wishes to make the restraining order a preliminary injunction. If he is successful in dissolving the order, said Altman, he will ask the selectmen to hold an open session to set new suspension dates.

One concern Altman has is with the five day time limit to file an appeal with the Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission (ABCC). Copies of a letter seeking an appeal hearing were sent to Wilmington Town Hall and the ABCC. The copy at Town Hall, said Altman, was time stamped November 6. Altman discovered the copy sent to ABCC was not stamped as to date of receipt.

New Shamrock attorney Louis Cassis of Quincy will have a chance to appeal the selectmen's decision on January 17. Cassis, who is a former commissioner of the ABCC, replaces Kevin Sullivan of Tewksbury.

Special town meeting: two pass, two flop

The special town meeting in Wilmington Monday night was an exercise in contrasts.

Voters gave unanimous approval to a subdivision in North Wilmington, voting to rezone from R60 to R20 a plot of land off Andover Street belonging to Kevin McDonald.

Lester Chisholm, however, did not fare as well. His article seeking to rezone land from R60 to R20 was overwhelmingly rejected.

Al Fiorenza was rejected in his bid to rezone land on West Street from residential to general business.

Steve Lawrenson, though, won rezoning to general business for a parcel near the North Wilmington parking lot.

Although McDonald and Chisholm were seeking to reduce lot sizes, there were striking differences between the two articles.

McDonald is a young man who has purchased a parcel of land next door to his parents' home on Andover Street. He has worked at clearing the land over the past 18 months, and plans to build some homes. His plans are to earn enough money to be able to afford one of the homes for his own.

He developed much of the proposal on his own, and had Ken Miller, an engineer who lives nearby, set up the subdivision. Under the present zoning, he could probably fit five homes on the parcel, and would have problems with water easements.

With the land rezoned to R20, he will be able to build 13 houses.

McDonald set about winning approval of the zoning change by visiting each of the neighbors in the area to discuss the matter. The portion of Andover Street where he lives is surrounded by industrial land, and neighbors saw the subdivision as a chance to draw more voters into the area, and hopefully sway the area into more residential development.

Kevin did such a good job convincing his neighbors that they were handing out flyers outside the town meeting in favor of the zoning change.

Chisholm was also seeking a zoning change from R60 to R20 for 38 acres of the family farm, located off Hopkins Street near the Billerica line. This was his third attempt to have land rezoned.

The section of land which Chisholm wanted rezoned lies near a subdivision which is also zoned R-60. Access to Chisholm's proposed development would be by way of that subdivision, Reed Street.

Chisholm told the town meeting that his original plan started because of troubles in the family business, raising milk.

"There comes a time when a farmer has to do something he doesn't like to do," he said.

Chisholm said the town doesn't need more $300,000 homes. It needs more homes that people can afford.

Chisholm ran into stiff opposition from his neighbors in the Reed Street subdivision. One of them was Arlene Surprenant, who said her quarrel about Chisholm's proposal was how he had gone about it, never meeting with neighbors or telling them about his plans to go

Design contract approved for light

The Middlesex County Commissioners on Tuesday afternoon voted approval of a contract for design of road improvements on Route 129 at Route 38 in Wilmington. The improvements center around a new set of traffic lights. The lights are being installed to help with the traffic expected from the new ice arena.

The contract, with Green International, is for $15,000. The construction is expected to be worth $345,000.

The town of Wilmington is also planning work in the area, including drainage, which will take the total project value over $400,000.

The design contract is for two months. The job is to be ready for bid in late winter.

The Tewksbury advantages are along the defensive and offensive lines, where they are much bigger than your typical TMHS teams. Senior linemen Brian Donahue, Mike Fitzpatrick and Jay Kelley are having monster type years in front of the prototype monster Brian Aylward in the defensive backfield. The senior Aylward will be wrapping up a marvelous three year career at TMHS Thursday morning. The Redmen also have the conference' leading scorer in senior running back Tim Boudreau with 70 points.

The Wildcats have some players with potential who could use Thanksgiving as a nice stepping stone to next season. Those players include not only Woods, but running backs Don Sullivan, Pat Nally and receivers Bob Labossiere and Steve Hanafin. And let's not forget junior linemen C.J. Barber, Tim Fay and Butch McGovern.

Last week the practicing Wildcats hardly looked like an 0-9 team, displaying enthusiasm in what can become a very dreary fall experience.

They could just about wipe out the bad memories with a victory at Alumni Field Thursday morning.

Wilmington Women's Club celebrates 85th anniversary

by Arlene Surprenant
The Wilmington Women's Club celebrated its 85th Anniversary November 20 with a special luncheon and an hour long for members and invited guests.

Members dined on a ham and rice dinner and viewed the 1951 play "Sowers of Seed," written by Louise Cummings for the organization's 50th Anniversary. The luncheon was pulled together by committee members, Helen Handrahan, Jeane Hartka, Edith Michelson, Judi Simmons, Jeane Sottile, Barbara Webber, and Elizabeth White.

The club has an extensive history in Wilmington. It was founded in October, 1901 by Sophia F.H. Bond, who became its first president. Twenty-eight women--most of them wives of Masons who had recently established a lodge in town--formed the nucleus of the club. Those first monthly meetings were held at members' homes, where Mrs. Bond's favorite song, "Sweet Alice Ben Holt," soon became an integral part of each program.

From the beginning, the club had a constitution and several committees. Today, it is affiliated with the Mass. State Federation of Women's Clubs and contains six committees in art, education, international affairs, home life, public affairs, and conservation. Members still follow the purpose of the club which is "to form a recognized center for social and mental culture, and to foster a generous public spirit in the community."

According to president Liz White, who took over the leadership role from past president Jeane Sottile in April, the Wilmington Women's Club, though service oriented, also provides an opportunity for social interaction. Meetings held on the third Thursdays of the month at the United Methodist Church are fun as well as a learning experience.

Membership is now close to the 100 member mark, though in the past, says Liz, they had a waiting list and close to 200 members. With more and more women entering the workforce, she explains, it's hard to find women who have time to give to the organization. But, she adds, the group always welcomes

Liz herself first joined the club in 1971 at the urging of her mother-in-law. She now has a chance "to do a lot of creative things" like direct plays and help with necessary art projects and decorations. Liz is ably assisted by club officers Helen Handrahan (vice-president), Jean Hartka (treasurer), Edith Michelson (assistant treasurer), Marjorie Walsh (corresponding secretary), and Phyllis Flaherty (publicity chairman). She also serves on the Board of Directors, comprised of all officers plus the chairmen of the six committees.

Past activities and pet projects have been many and varied. Not too long ago, the club provided a talking information center for the visually impaired and planted flowering shrubs at the Regional Health Center. According to Liz, a the group was also responsible for funding the Visiting Nurses Association and a dental clinic in town and educating public school children on poison control approximately eight years ago.

The club provides scholarship assistance to deserving Wilmington High School and Shawsheen Tech students and becomes actively involved in town celebrations and special events.

Fundraisers, such as selling strawberry shortcake, jewelry, ornaments, baked goods, and the sponsorship of an upcoming flea market next April, help support the numerous projects of this worthwhile organization.

Liz sums it up in a nutshell. The club not only provides "something outside the home," she says, but "it is rewarding to do the various things we do."

She's only 11, but a real champion on ice

by Arlene Surprenant
Though she's only 11, Amanda Farkas of Linda Road, Wilmington, is a real champion on the ice.

In competition with 33 other 11 to 15-year-olds in November, Amanda emerged as the 1987 Intermediate Ladies Champion in the New England Region. In order to win the title, the young skater performed a two and a half minute free style program and successfully completed three figures in the figure skating part of the competition. She placed first in figures and second in free style, giving her enough combined marks to win the championship.

Amanda will now move on to represent the entire New England area in the 1987 Eastern Championship competition in Virginia, December 8 through 13. On Sunday, Amanda and her supportive family--mom Susan, dad Lou, and her eight-year-old brother Brian, will travel south to root for their pride and joy. Amanda will compete both Tuesday and Wednesday at the Mt. Vernon Sports Complex in the Intermediate Ladies Division.

Though she has developed into a real pro under coaches Julie Graham and Paul McGrath and currently represents the Skating Club of Boston, what's amazing is that the young champion has developed her skill in only four short years. When she first started skating, she progressed slowly, practicing from one or two days a week to three days a week plus summers.

Amanda Farkas
N.E. Regional

"We gave her the choice (to continue skating)" says her proud mom, adding, "sometimes she misses out on social activities, but we've left it basically up to her."

Amanda's present schedule is very tight. For instance, she trains three hours a day, five days a week in Boston. She also practices weekends starting at 9 a.m. and some mornings before school opens. But even with a schedule which would overwhelm most of her peers, she remains an honor student at the Woburn Street School and a down-to-earth sixth grader interested in such other pursuits as reading and playing soccer, baseball, and hockey.

"She knows she has to work hard and she loves it," explains Susan. Her daughter concurs, telling you she skates because "I like it. It's like I've accomplished something and I feel good that all my work has paid off."

Amanda goes on to explain that another aspect of competing is making new friends wherever she goes. Does she get nervous? "yes," she explains, "but I just go out and do the best I can."

With such an attitude plus her considerable talent, it's no wonder Amanda Farkas is a champion who can only look ahead to a bright future on the ice.

LIFE INSURANCE AS A TAX SHELTER

Would you like the tax-deferring benefits of and I.R.A., on a larger scale, with a way to tap into your money, tax free? That's "investment-advantaged life insurance," not a risk under the new tax law.

Most popular is the single-premium life policy. The insurance company invests most of your investment on your behalf, guaranteeing to pay as much as 8 percent for a certain period. This is still life insurance, with a guaranteed face value and tax breaks.

The special plus: You can borrow your own cash value at a true cost to you of 2 percent or less. You can use the borrowed money for tax-free retirement living expenses and never pay it back (though this will reduce death benefits).

Other types of tax-advantaged life insurance include single-premium variable life, which lets you direct your premium among the insurer's mutual funds, for higher -- or possibly lower -- returns, and Universal Life II, with more variables.

Tax benefits are available if you know where to look. Ask us at: Joyce K. Brisbois, C.P.A., 8 Middlesex Ave., P.O. Box 176, Wilmington, MA 01887 658-5034.

Delay granted for wetlands marking

by Bill Conlon
A proposal to build two houses on in possible wetland drew fire from neighbors and board members this week when the proposal was heard during the regular meeting of the Tewksbury Conservation Commission.

The proposal, made by Rudolph Catalano, sought permission to build two houses off Kneeland Street in South Tewksbury.

The Conservation Commission's approval is required on the proposal because the construction would take place within the 100 foot buffer zone placed around designated wetlands.

The land, which is identified as being adjacent to "Fourth Street," an as-yet unbuilt "paper street," was described by neighbor Daniel Desmond as "a swamp."

According to Desmond, one of the earlier property owners in the area had dammed up a nearby stream to build a skating rink. Desmond also said there is a "trench" about a foot-and-a-half deep on the parcel, where someone scraped out the loam and "took it away to Medford."

The building proposal, which was made by Catalano by civil engineer Armand Provost, called for digging out part of the wetlands on the two parcels and raising the ground level between the house locations and the wetlands.

The property would be accessed from Kneeland Street, with Fourth Street paved up to the house lots. The paved portion of Fourth Street would cross what was marked on Provost's map as a ditch. Desmond claimed that the ditch is actually an open, running stream.

According to Provost, sewer service to the house lots would come in from Brown Street, running along Fourth. Provost said Fourth Street would be paved from Kneeland to the houses, but that through access to Brown Street would not be completed except for the sewer line.

After studying the map for the project, Conservation Commission member Frank Groom had a few comments of his own.

"They want to put a house right smack in the wetlands!" Groom exclaimed. "These houses are entirely inside the buffer zone."

Groom next asked Provost what percentage of the lots is actual wetland.

"What is it, eighty percent?" Groom asked. Provost admitted that the lots are probably 60 percent wetlands. Groom then promised to vote down the building proposal, should a vote be taken.

Conservation Chairman Bob Rogers disagreed with Groom's negative opinion, stating that "if it's at all buildable then we should look at it that way." Rogers next asked Provost if the wetlands had been properly "flagged," and discovered that they were not.

Chairman Rogers proposed a two-week extension on the request, until the wetlands could be properly marked.

"Then we can all go down and see it," Rogers said. The continuation of the public hearing is scheduled for 7 p.m. on December 15. The Conservation Commission meets in the Planning Board office in the DPW Building on Whipple Road.

Interviews continue for Tech superintendency

In a continuing process to interview candidates to fill the position left vacant by former Superintendent/Director Benjamin Wolk, the Shawsheen Tech School Committee questioned three more applicants at their meeting Tuesday night. Last week, members heard the first three candidates chosen for consideration by the New England School Development Council (NESDC). Next week, the final four applicants will be interviewed.

According to chairman Jack Miller, the list of 10 candidates will be narrowed to three by mid-December. After another round of interviews, he said, a new superintendent/director is expected to be on board in January.

Interviewed Tuesday for the $50,000 to $55,000 position were Robert Peach, math/science cluster chairman at the Greater Lowell Vocational Technical School, and in-house candidates Anthony Bazzinotti and Peter Quirk. Bazzinotti is Technical Coordinator at Shawsheen while Quirk is a teacher in the school's Chem-Technology program.

Each applicant was questioned for an hour on topics ranging from the superintendent's role and the addition of arts and computer literacy to the curriculum to declining enrollment and budgetary concerns.

One thread running through each candidate's presentation was the need for better public relations to increase student enrollment and enhance the school's image in member communities.

Bazzinotti called for a community action plan to "sell this place and extoll the kind of things we do." Quirk pushed to actively seek more students through personalized letters sent to eighth graders and pamphlets distributed at public malls. Peach wanted to make students more aware of what they could achieve and help them work up to their potential.

All three applicants, in varying degrees, were against mandatory drug testing for students and new employees.

Peach told committeemen that education, and not mandatory testing, was the "avenue to pursue" since tests are "not necessarily reliable."

"You have to be very, very careful when you're giving up any of your rights," said Bazzinotti, who was not in favor of testing "at this time."

Quirk felt you can get caught up in testing and "never really understand" what the results mean. He added that, so far, he saw no need for testing but it might be necessary if problems arise in the future.

On a more personal level, Peach, who has a son at the school, said "I have a genuine interest in the school itself and vocational education" and assured members he wouldn't use the position as a stepping stone.

Bazzinotti felt the new superintendent should be a "visionary," someone who would not be afraid to fulfill the school's potential or reach for new horizons like adult re-training.

"I come with a minimum of skills in administration which may or may not be a hindrance," said Quirk, who advocated more suitable placement areas, like banking and finance and retail management, for female students.

The other candidates under consideration are Brent Colbry, Director of School Services in Millinocket, Maine; Charles Lyons, Executive Director of the Mass Association of Vocational Administrators in Lexington; Bonnie Marmor, Assistant Superintendent of the Bergen County Vocational District in New Jersey; Marsha McDonough, Director of the Vinal Regional Vocational Technical School in Middletown, Conn.; and Charles Valera, Assistant Director/Principal of Nashoba Technical High School in Westford. Also, remaining in-house candidates John McDermott, Area Coordinator of Shawsheen Tech; and Bruce Perkins, Director of Guidance at the school.

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY LENDER

December 19 meeting on center project

by Arlene Surprenant

Wilmington selectmen Monday night discussed an upcoming meeting with DPW Commissioner Robert Tierney, members of the Wilmington Redevelopment Authority (WRA), state legislators, and other persons interested in moving ahead with the Rt. 129 (Town Center) Project. At this writing, the meeting is slated for 10 a.m. on December 19 in Boston.

Selectmen went over concerns which they would like the state to address. These include the development of a Church Street/Olsen Road bypass before leveling town center; the lack of communication between the Dept. of Public Works and the board of selectmen, in particular; the state's schedule for the work; the fate of the fire station and train depot on Main Street; and concerns of the Water and Sewer Commission.

In the past, the state has contended that its main concern is replacing the Burlington Avenue Bridge, which many feel to be unsafe, and roads leading to and from that structure. The redevelopment authority, which has jurisdiction over the relocation of town center, as well as town officials, are equally concerned with changes to the present town center to address traffic congestion, aesthetics, and other issues in that part of town.

Speaking for his board, Chairman Rocco DePasquale said they are very concerned with "the impact this is going to have on the town, as a whole," as well as the impact on those "most directly affected" by the project.

Jim Stewart brought up two points. He asked what would be the state's position if the town decided it didn't want the project? Though he felt this would be unlikely, he said he wanted to know "how much are they willing to bend?"

Stewart also asked which board the state perceives as the final "decision maker" in town, especially since there seems to be some confusion over various roles. Perhaps, he said, since "the state paid for the project, they should decide."

WRA Chairman Jay Donovan, who sat in on part of the discussion, seemed optimistic. "I think we can go in with a united front to see what our concerns are," he said.

An artificial tree just isn't Christmas

by Bill Conlon

It's that time of year again. Before the Thanksgiving turkey is even cold, little trees are sprouting up in parking lots all over town, soon to shed billions of pine needles on carpets all over New England.

The tradition of planting a Christmas tree in the living room was brought to us from the Old Country, and it's still going strong. It's a curious custom, to be sure, but it is deeply entrenched in our hearts.

Of course, it has to be a real tree, no matter what the cost or mess. No heretic would dare bring a plastic Christmas tree into our house. No way.

As a youngster, my folks once tried to duck the outrageous cost of buying the annual Tannenbaum by purchasing an artificial tree. They would have received the same reaction by dragging a dead horse into the living room.

"An artificial tree? Yuck! We want a real tree! An artificial tree just isn't CHRISTMAS, Dad!"

So, poor old Dad tucked the artificial back into the box and shucked out the bucks for yet another dead spruce. Somewhere, deep in the attic, that artificial tree still awaits, like the Prisoner of Zenda hoping for a glimpse of sunlight.

Years of experience have given us a few rules to follow, thankfully. The lessons were hard learned and expensive, but at least now we know how to live with a dead tree in the house.

Of course, picking the right dead tree is no easy chore. If you buy a tree too early, the needles will drop by the time Christmas rolls around. On the other hand, the tree selection dwindles down to a few sparse, ugly twigs by Christmas eve.

Some folks, for reasons unknown, seem to enjoy flitting from lot to frozen lot, looking for the perfect tree. (Big hint: There is NO such thing as a perfect tree. Be prepared to compromise.)

Picking the tree is an art form in itself, by the way. Experienced tree shoppers walk right past the perfect specimens at the front of the lot, refusing to even risk a glance at the monstrous price tag. These tree-wise rangers head straight for the back lot, to pick and choose from the also-rans.

Then begins the "Litany of Nope," heard in Christmas tree lots around the country.

"Nope, too tall."

"Nope, too many bald spots."

"Nope, double top."

"Nope, too expensive."

"Nope, much too expensive."

Sure enough, the kids will fall in love with one scraggly tree (each), narrowing the choices down to a few.

So off you go, hands blackened with pitch -- probably less than satisfied and a few bucks poorer, but at least you have your tree for the season. The custom is fulfilled.

Custom also has it that at least one branch will be snapped off on the ride home. Awkward is defined as wrestling with a Christmas tree, trying to tie it to a car's roof. The fir really flies.

Once home, expect to lose two more branches squeezing the tree past the fridge. It never fails.

Getting the dear, departed shrub to stand upright in a bucket is also fun, with the enjoyment usually lasting about an hour or so.

Another thing which has never changed is the "10 percent rule" of Christmas tree ornaments. Every year, at least ten percent of the ornaments will be smashed by curious babies and playful kittens. Of course, only the most expensive blown-glass ornaments will go.

Wise tree-owners hang their best ornaments high in the tree, out of the reach of grubby paws. But if the babies and kittens don't get them, however, they usually drop mysteriously on their own, like glass apples. At least they make an interesting "pop" when they go.

After The Big Day, when the tree silently disappears under a tidal wave of torn paper, there comes a time when the Tannenbaum simply must go. It's a difficult decision, much like taking a beloved family pet on a one-way ride to the vet, but the tree, sooner or later, has got to go.

When the falling needles are brown instead of green, that's a good indication that the tree has outlived its usefulness.

Another hint is when the tree looks out of place among the Easter decorations.

Hauling the tree back out is always messier than getting it in. This time, expect SIX branches to snap off against the fridge, and an inch-thick trail of needles from the living room out to the snowbank by the street.

But rest easy, America -- the cycle is a never-ending one.

Somewhere in upstate Maine, next year's Christmas tree is sitting patiently in a wooded lot, growing slowly and awaiting the approach of the ax-man: Soon it too will appear in a neighborhood parking lot, hoping to shed its needles on someone's carpet.

And the artificial tree collects another year's layer of dust in the attic. Poor Dad -- he should have known.

It just isn't Christmas without a real tree.

Frankly Speaking

by Kevin John Sowyrda

Governor Dukakis sustained the major defeat of his second term in office last week when the state legislature voted to override his veto of a bill, which will now exempt members of the Board of Regents of Higher Education from certain provisions of the conflict of interest laws. House Speaker George Keverian and Senate President William Bulger proved beyond a doubt that their power in the legislature is still greater than the would be President of the United States, Michael Dukakis.

The power struggle between the governors office and the legislative leadership was not over a matter that has been minimal in public attention. It concerns an area of state administration that the governor has successfully politicized beyond any point of recognition. That is, the Board of Regents, which is responsible for setting policies for the state colleges and universities in the Commonwealth.

The most recent chapter in the saga concerning the Board of Higher Education was charges brought against James M. Howell, a former member of the board and a close friend of George Keverian. Howell, as a member of the board, had argued against a proposal to create a graduate nursing program at U-Mass-Boston. The charged conflict is that Howell could not do this as he is a member of the board of trustees at Boston University, which has its own graduate school of nursing. The contention could be made that Boston University, or any such school, benefits from less competition for students.

However, Howell did not vote on the proposal when debate was ended, and properly so. In fact, two other members who are affiliated with private colleges as Howell is, did vote on the proposal, and yet neither was charged by the Ethics Commission. This is what led to charges in the legislature of selective justice. There are those that felt the governor was getting his revenge against Howell, through the Ethics commission, for Howell's past support of former State Representative James Collins. Collins had been appointed as the new chancellor of higher education last summer.

However, this appointment, which was actively supported by the legislature, was an anathema to Dukakis. The governor came out publicly against the Collins appointment, and vowed to seek his quick replacement. Subsequently, the governor replaced several members of the board, and Collins was ousted. This is what began a major rift between the governor and the speaker of the house.

It should be noted that Collins was seen by many as a qualified candidate. He had served as chairman of the house education committee, and is a product of the state higher education system himself, having graduated from the University of Massachusetts. But this did not suffice Dukakis, who was severely criticized for stacking the board of higher education so as to achieve Collins' ouster.

Thus, just a few months after the summer controversy, Howell, who had been an avid supporter of Collins, finds himself charged by the Ethics Commission in a matter in which he did not vote. Keverian's reaction showed what he felt of the charge, as he immediately pushed through legislation that would simply exempt members of the Board of Higher Education from the charges now confronting his friend Howell. Talk about a good friend to have in a time of need. You just give George a quick ring, and he'll pass a bill making you exempt from the law you accused of breaking.

But to be serious for a moment, Keverian and the legislature were actually quite justified in taking the action they did. The simple facts would point out that Howell was being selected out for punishment, most probably in payment for his past support of a candidate for chancellor whom Dukakis, for reasons still only known to him, found revolting.

As the override veto became close, Dukakis and his aides had been hoping for enough support in the senate to hold off the override. Senator Carol Amick was a certain vote for the governor, as was Gerry D'Amico, who is rumored to be up for a cabinet position in the Dukakis Administration next year. But, this did not suffice, as Senate President Bulger held a democratic caucus in search for votes, and the support of some key republican members of the senate went against the governor. With the final vote in, the governor had lost the senate with a 22-14 vote. The House vote was an expected easy win for Keverian, 117-29 in favor of override.

And the end result of all this is not simply that Dukakis will have to keep a greater distance from the Board of Regents, but that he will have to pay more attention to some political matters right here in the Bay State. Here we have a democratic governor, planning to run for president, who couldn't get the necessary votes in an overwhelming democratic legislature to hold back an override of his veto. That's something that Cuomo and Hart are going to rib him about.

The solution for the Duke is to concentrate on some needed shoring up of relations with the state legislature. The governor's greatest problem here is that he just has not been polished in how he treats the rank and file, or views their role in the process of governing the state. Prior to any more embarrassments, which would only detract from his presidential aspiration, the governor needs to guarantee that the override of last week is the last one he'll sustain. Senate President Bulger put it best when he said, "I'm with him if he runs for president . . . But he's not president yet . . . I'm the president".

letter to the editor

Dear Larz:

In Wilmington our elected officials are putting its youths on the bottom of the priority ladder.

The salaries being negotiated in the teachers' contract, must place them in line with the surrounding communities. A successful conclusion to the contract negotiations would bring some degree of unity to the system.

For the first time in years, school officials, teachers and administrators may realize that they are on the same side. This will require their combined professional skills to provide the education Wilmington students need and deserve, to keep up our above average test scores and overall excellence in education.

The Humble Farmer Down home barber shop

I don't usually go into the barber shop when it's crowded because if even one person is sucking on a cigarette I know I'll come out smelling like a burning dump. Staying away is my loss because there are interesting things to be heard when half a dozen men are sitting around waiting for a trim.

Right here I should explain that I'm talking about a real barber shop: The regulars who come there have all memorized the December 1978 Newsweek and the June 1958 National Geographic. They know the haircut will cost four dollars and a quarter because that's what it always costs. A big hand-printed sign on the wall - Haircuts $4.25 - eliminates any chance of misunderstanding. But when the sheet is pulled away and given a sharp snap, real men always stand and mumble, "How much I owe yuh, George?"

They are men who are vaguely aware that there are places in the city where barbers, who trim hair with razors and call themselves "stylists," charge as much as 10 dollars. But when you come out you don't look like a plucked buzzard which is why no real man would ever consider going there. Even for three and a quarter. Here at home a man can tramp in with traces of an honorable profession on his boots and not feel out of place.

Most barber shop dialogue resembles the vague grunts heard in a Sylvester Stallone movie. One speaks without moving the head or lips. Comments are made matter-of-factly, without display of emotion. That's the way men talk in a real barber shop.

The speaker has to pretend that only the man he's talking to is able to hear him. Everyone else is in the position of eavesdropper which is another reason it makes for such good listening.

If a story has universal appeal, the barber, in his position as moderator, can bring up the topic again in a round-about innocent fashion. Then the story is retold from beneath the barber's cloth and, being recently rehearsed, usually shows marked improvement with the embellished second telling.

These stories must not be confused with your typical barber shop joke where the bald man gets into the chair and says, "Add a little to the top." I'm talking about small or significant things that have recently happened to friends and neighbors. The men in the barbershop already think they know all there is to know about it. A man speaks only if he thinks he knows more.

"Albert lost his toupe."

"I see he ain't been wearing it."

"Always put it on a lampshade when he came in. His cousin who was visiting turned on the light and melted it."

Long pause to see if anyone will bring up the real reason Albert's name was mentioned.

"Lost his wife too."

"Hard to keep a good-looking woman happy."

"Hard to keep any woman happy."

"God never made a woman so homely but what she could find some other woman's husband to run off with her."

"Why would the best-looking woman in town run off with a man with no teeth?"

"If I'd a known what she was looking for I'd a had mine yanked out a long time ago."

The December 7, 1961 edition of the Town Crier of Wilmington noted that:

Ted Kennedy, assistant DA for Suffolk County and brother of the President was scheduled to speak at a meeting of St. Dorothy's Holy Name on Sunday.

Weinberg's Department Store was advertising that it would remain open until midnight and that the Merrimack Valley Charge Card would be honored there.

The Princess phone, new to the market was being advertised - "gleaming with newness - give a Princess for Christmas."

The First National Store was offering tangerines, 2 dozen for 49 cents; London broil at 89 cents a pound and 5 grapefruit 39 cents.

Leo LeBlanc, of Clark Street, was appointed acting agent of the Board of Health. He was pictured being sworn in by Town Clerk Esther Russell. He would receive about $35 a week as health officer inspecting and investigating complaints.

An organizational meeting would be held at WHS cafeteria for parents of children attending the Swain and Center Schools interested in forming a parents' association.

Viola Melzar of Lake Street was elected secretary of the Friends of Tewksbury Hospital. Clara Crotty of Silverhurst Avenue would serve as treasurer.

The total school budget was completed and went from $820,758.75 in 1961 to $922,197.19 for 1962.

Alfred O'Connor of Shawshaven Avenue, a John Hancock employee, was attending a life insurance sales conference in Boston.

Tony DeLuca, supervising principal of Wilmington Public Schools was elected by the school committee on Nov. 29 to be principal of the new Salem Street School. He would begin his new duties in January.

For $1.00 a can, the Ladies Auxiliary of the Little League would deliver golden butter bits--excellent for Christmas giving.

A four room apartment on Salem Street was offered for $100 a month.

Fr. John Regan, former curate of St. Thomas Church, had been promoted to captain in the Chaplain Corps in the U.S. Air Force.

Uncle Harry was a winner

Wilmington may not seem like a horse town, but there are several horse owners living here. House painter Jack Pellerin recently joined their ranks.

Now don't look for Jack to be out trotting on Sunday afternoons. Jack's steed is of the thoroughbred variety, a racehorse. His name is Uncle Harry.

Jack and his nephew recently purchased the horse for $3000. As any horse owner knows, their expenses don't stop there. They spent some money to get the eight-year old veteran back into shape. It costs money to keep a horse.

Saturday night was the "big night" -- Uncle Harry's first race, up at Rockingham. Jack was naturally quite excited.

Would you believe . . . Uncle Harry won! Jack and his nephew came up with a $1900 purse.

Of course, the odds could have been better, but Jack had told all his friends about the horse. There were about 70 people from Wilmington at Rockingham on Saturday night, all betting on Uncle Harry. All those bets drove his odds down.

The race was a "claiming race," but nobody elected to stake a claim on the horse. Had someone decided to buy the horse, they could have.

Now Jack is looking forward to the next race.

We received your letter, but . . .

The Town Crier's mail bag often holds a few surprises.

On any given day, the mail bag may hold subscription renewals, press releases, advertisements, and the occasional letter to the editor.

But while many of the letters to our editor are written by funny, fascinating and even furious writers, far too many of the letters are thrown away because they don't follow Town Crier policy.

The most common offense is the anonymous letter to the editor. One example arrived this week, complaining of unfair "politicking" in Tewksbury's minor league baseball.

The letter was signed "concerned parents," period. Unfortunately, we refused to publish the letter because no one was willing to sign it. The Town Crier policy is simple: names may be withheld on request, but all letters must be signed by the author.

Another no-no is a letter with libelous material. One letter received at the Town Crier offices not long ago sank to the level of name-calling, which could have resulted in a libel suit against this newspaper. While we respect the opinions of our letter-writers, we also respect the intelligence of our readers.

Finally, some of the letters are just too long to fit. Some letters, in fact, run to three and four pages of single-spaced type, almost twice the usual length of our editorials. Our preferred limit is 500 words, about the same length as a single typed page, and shorter letters are even better.

Letters to the editor provide an important outlet for our readers' opinions and observations. And if these simple rules are followed, more letters will appear on the editorial page, and fewer will wind up in the Round File.

Wamesit and other Indians

Camping grounds and artifacts

Copyright ©1986
by Capt. Larz Neilson

How does a person determine the site where Indians may have lived?

It is easy to guess, except that the answer is not always right. Drive your car along a river road, say somewhere in eastern Massachusetts. When a nice hill comes into view, overlooking the river, and there is some flat land nearby—that's the place where you might want to build a home. It was also the place that the Indians of Massachusetts chose for a home, for good and practical reasons.

They lived whenever possible near rivers and larger brooks, not only for the fresh water, but for the supply of fish that would be available.

They lived on elevations that were higher, at least a little higher, than the nearby ground. The purpose was to get rid of mosquitoes. There were fewer mosquitoes at a higher elevation.

They wanted flat lands nearby, in which to cultivate the corn, beans and other vegetables which were a part of their diet. Those flat lands also served as burial grounds.

Such sites could be found along the Merrimack River, the Shawsheen and the Ipswich. The Wamesits, as was reported in the Nov. 26th issue of this paper, lived in what is now Lowell, where the Concord River and the Merrimack meet; and where there were a number of hills, such as that known as Fort Hill.

There were also Indians living in what is now Tewksbury, along the Shawsheen River, and near the Oblate Father's Novitiate and Round Pond. It is to be doubted if there were camps on Ames Hill, because Ames Pond, below it, was formed after the Civil War by a dam constructed across Strongwater Brook.

Whether or not one should call those Indians "Wamesits" is a question which is hard to answer. To the writer's way of thinking they were a part of the same family, and "Wamesit" is more of a "family" than a "tribal" name.

Then, too, they could have been a part of the Shawshins, who seem to have been centered on what is now the Town of Billerica.

There is no such tribal or family name for the Indians who lived in what is now Wilmington. They could have been Wamesits, or Shawshins, or, perhaps, Saugusts, Indians who lived further south. In Wilmington the Indian homes were centered on Buck's Hill, where the Wildwood School is located today.

There were Indian villages along the Shawsheen River, on several sites.

Looking upstream, from the Shawsheen River bridge in Wilmington/Billerica, there is a high bank of land for several thousand feet, to the east of the river. The land is for all purposes flat, and, traditionally was the site of Indian camps many years ago. The writer has never explored the area for that purpose.

Further down stream, in Tewksbury, but nearer to Heath Brook was (in terms of today's knowledge) an important village, dating back over 4,000 years. The site is today the parking lot for the Tewksbury Shopping Center.

The land for the shopping center was bulldozed 35 or 40 years ago, and in the process many Indian arrowheads and artifacts were found. Quite a few were uncovered. But the great collection at that place came from the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lacy, who lived at 1795 Main Street. Over a period of 25 years the couple had picked up over 1000 artifacts.

One item of interest was an arrow head made of copper. It had been traded east, probably, from Michigan or some other source of copper.

The site was known as the Folsom Farm, and Miss Kate Folsom had been the chairman of the Tewksbury Library Trustees.

Mr. and Mrs. Lacy presented their collection to the library in her honor. A cabinet was donated by members of the Battles family, who lived on North Street.

Professor Fred Burrill of the Lowell Technological Institute graded and sorted the collection, and kept several hundred for exhibition at the library.

Squibnocket Points

Some of the arrowheads, small, white, and triangular, made of quartz, were at a later date identified by excavations which took place on Martha's Vineyard, and were called "Squibnocket Points," after the name for the area in which they were found.

Squibnocket Points were so named by William Ritchie, New York state archaeologist. He was the leader of the party which excavated and found the arrowheads, which were identified as having been made about 2190 BC, give or take 100 years. The dates were established by carbon-dating the charcoal remaining from campfires.

To anyone who seeks Indian artifacts, knowledge of Squibnocket Points is helpful in establishing dates. They are a very distinctive type. The writer once found five Squibnocket Points at the foot of Buck's Hill in Wilmington, in ground that had been disturbed by the construction of the Wildwood School.

Those points were in a small area, of less than one square foot, suggesting that they may have been buried with their late owner. Of course, in that wet ground, there were no traces of human remains.

Shopping center

In terms of size, the shopping center site may have taken up 20 or more acres. There is land, flat, to the northwest that may have been a part of the late archaic habitations. The land where Hinckley Road and Tanglewood Avenue are today located suggests itself as the site for the Indian camps, and gardeners in that area should watch for arrowheads or other artifacts.

South Street site

Off South Street, about 600 feet northeasterly of Bridge Street in Tewksbury is a woodland road, leading over to the Shawsheen River. There is today a house, in back, and the road has become a private driveway.

It leads to a site which was, for about 10,000 years, a gravel hill. The hill disappeared about 30 years ago, as the result of commercial excavation.

A map belonging to the Tewksbury Planning Board identifies the site with the words "Indian Village." The map is over 100 years old.

Undoubtedly there were many Indian artifacts to be found on that hill. Undoubtedly, too, those artifacts are now part of concrete foundations, or of fill to be found under some of the modern highways.

Indian Ridge is the name chosen by the developers of the area where many condominiums are today, further down Shawsheen Street. It may just possibly be correct. It is over a mile to the river, and perhaps the Indians of yesteryear didn't like to walk that far to the water. The area between the condos and the river is worth consideration.

Many other sites in Tewksbury are suggestive of an Indian past, especially along Strongwater Brook, to name a place. But, in practically every instance there have been gravel excavations, and the site is of no value.

Around Round Pond is a different matter. That pond was definitely Indian territory until the Kittredge family began to build over 200 years ago. As a guess, the site of the Oblate Novitiate was a site for Indian camps. The level land around the pond was a site for many Indian cornfields.

Wilmington

There were several areas in Wilmington where Indians camped, but where today there is no trace. The areas were hills of gravel, which were excavated in recent years.

One such site was near the North Reading line. A gravel hill on that site has had a yield of millions of square yards of gravel, since 1851, when the Salem and Lowell Railroad began to carry gravel to Salem.

Undoubtedly there were Indians living there. The gravel hills had southern exposure, and below the camp sites was Martins Brook.

Two possible sites for arrowheads, etc., remain.

Long view

An overall view of the cabinet and arrow heads in the Tewksbury Library. Both the top and bottom are distorted because of the camera angle at which the picture was made.

Many of the points and implements shown here are hard to date. On the right side are several chisels, used in working with wood, and the round objects at top were fishing weights, (plummets).

One is just off Salem Street, westerly of Martins Brook. There is some turf, higher than where the old Nod Mill used to stand. Under that turf, at the top of a small hill, is an obvious site for former Indian camps.

But, to an amateur, to find such a site would be a tough job. Another site, further east, is actually in North Reading, in what used to be the sanatorium. There a practiced eye could pick probable sites. Amateurs would not be able to do so.

Buck's Hill

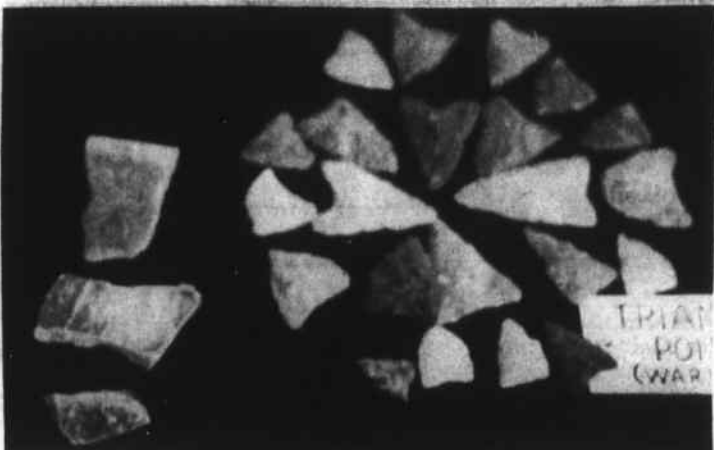

The best site in Wilmington was around the Wildwood School, on what used to be known as Buck's Hill. Most of the artifacts are gone, but one or more occasionally find their way to the office of this paper where, the finder hopes, they can be identified.

Buck's Hill was "settled" by the white men, the William and Roger Buck families in 1671 or thereabouts. They found an area of several hundred acres which had been, up to 60 years before, practically denuded of trees.

The ground below the hill had been cultivated for 4,000 years, and the hill during the same time was the site of an Indian village. The area involved included what is today the Wildwood Cemetery.

4000 years old?

White triangular points, made of quartz, and grey points of about the same size, date back to about 2900 BC. The white points are called "Squibnocket," from the name of a site in Martha's Vineyard, and the grey points are called "Wading River," from a site in Long Island, N.Y.

Both kinds may be found in many parts of southern New England, and both seem to date at about the same time. To the left are three shards, pieces of broken pottery, made much later, and probably date from the Woodland Age.

In a sense Buck's Hill tells the story of the American Indian. The hill, which technically is known as a "drumlin," was shaped by the glaciers, and is located at the headwaters of the Ipswich River. For the aboriginal natives it was a place where fish were plentiful and easy to catch.

The nearby country had much wildlife, including the whitetail deer, which provided first class meat.

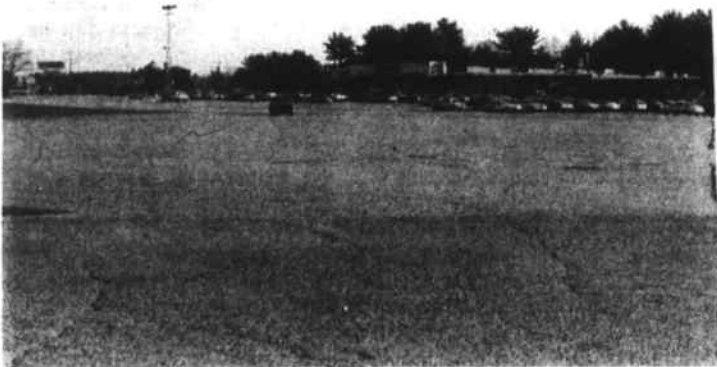

Indians lived here from the Late Archaic period until the Late Woodland, which is defined as ending about 1650. But they were gone before that date.

The disease of the white man, explorers and fisherman became the death knell of the Indians. The year 1617 is a popularly accepted date for the arrival of the smallpox virus, which killed thousands of the natives. Some did survive, to greet, for instance, the Pilgrims.

Buck's Hill is a site for Indian arrowheads etc., but not for the serious archaeologist. The ground has been disturbed many times, in the past 300 years.

The late Herb Barrows had a wonderful story about falling into a hole, while he was plowing the ground below Buck's Hill. He figured it may have been an Indian grave.

Wildwood School

Did you ever notice how hard it is to get a youngster to write a letter? The students in Mrs. Murphy's fourth grade class are all busy writing letters and not grumbling one bit about it. The class is participating in the Weekly Reader Writing Pals Program. The children are writing to pen pals in the fourth grade class at the Welborn Elementary School in Kansas City, Kansas, and they're finding out that writing assignments can be fun.

This worthwhile program builds friendship across the miles, teaches the students about other parts of the country, and gets them writing. Weekly Readers have been made available to the children through last year's Chapter 188 funds.

The next PAC meeting will be held Monday, Dec. 8, at 2:00 p.m.

Reduction in parking spaces denied

The Wilmington Board of Appeals has denied an application from the P.G.A. Realty trust of Andover for a special permit to authorize less parking than the law allows for property located on Lot 14, Upton Drive. A hearing on the facts was held in the Wilmington Town Hall on Nov. 10, 1986.

Peter Gross and Peter Crocker sought the right to put in 100 parking spaces instead of the number required by the zoning bylaw which is 152. They proposed to set aside the land for additional parking, but to keep it in its natural state, until such time as it would be needed.

The board of appeals felt that the appellants did not show any substantial hardship, and that special conditions do not affect the particular. The vote was unanimous.

Parents seek more info

by Arlene Surprenant
It was democracy in action as an overflow crowd at last Tuesday's school committee meeting gave input into several plans which would directly affect elementary and junior high students in Wilmington.

As Assistant Superintendent Henry Dembowski explained his recommendations on computer labs, a pilot program to extend the kindergarten day, and building reorganization, parents sought more statistics and specific information. Led by Bridget Zukas, who told the vocal audience to "let us know what you want" and Anthony Accardi, who said they needed "hard facts," committee members, too, sought more details relating to costs and numbers of students affected.

Like Dembowski, most parents favored a plan to install computer labs with 12 to 15 computers in each of the three elementary schools. Students from grades four and up would then be afforded more personalized time on computers with similar training in each school.

Most parents also favored an extended day kindergarten on a limited basis. After discussion with at least 500 parents in a series of six prior meetings, Dembowski said, he modified his plan in order to make it a voluntary pilot program. Parents would sign up in the spring and work with teachers to meet individual student's needs. The program, as outlined by Dembowski, would not extend past 1:30 p.m. nor be looked on as "free babysitting," but rather an enhancement of present curriculum offerings.

Most of the discussion of the evening, however, revolved around a plan to move sixth graders into each of the two intermediate schools. Judging from parent reaction, said Dembowski, this was the most popular of the five plans. It also met his criteria of being fiscally responsible, educationally sound, and causing least disruption to a family. Through a show of hands, the majority of the audience agreed.

Some parents questioned the wisdom of following whichever plan is chosen for only five years and moving the sixth graders largely to make room for computer labs and extended kindergarten classes. Dembowski replied administrators couldn't predict past five years with fluctuating growth and development. And he denied they would be "kicking out" sixth graders. Rather, he added, the plan would offer a more well rounded program and reduce class sizes.

Though most present did not go along with his idea, Superintendent Robert Horan said he will also consider a second proposal to merge all seventh and eighth graders into one intermediate school and use the second building for an elementary school.

"What if the whole thing doesn't work?" questioned one parent, concerned with the talk of moving students around. "Our children will have to play catch up....You're talking Utopia, but this is Wilmington."

After more interaction, it was decided Horan would offer his recommendation to the school committee, along with pertinent data and statistics, on December 10.

A follow-up December meeting was suggested to allow the public time to go over similar data sheets and afford the school committee a chance to make the final determination. It is expected any new proposals will go into effect September, 1987.

Wilmington tax appeals unresolved

Six Wilmington industries are still involved in an appeal process to receive tax abatements for fiscal 1986. The six plants filed for abatements in August, 1986, charging over-evaluation by the town.

The six companies are Keene Lighting, assessed at $6.5 million; Avco, assessed at $46 million;

Surface Coating Inc., assessed at $3.1 million; Polyvinyl Chemical Co., assessed at $2.3 million; Beatrice Foods, assessed at $1.3 million; and G.E., assessed at $12 million. The six companies paid close to $1.6 million total taxes for fiscal 1986 on total assessments valued at $72 million, according to Town Counsel Alan Altman.

Altman, acting in conjunction with Principal Assessor Anthony Krzeminski, originally filed interrogatories (questions) with the Appellate Tax Board then filed for a motion to dismiss when answers to the interrogatories were not forthcoming. Now, said, Altman, that board has given the companies 30 days to answer his questions.

Traffic lights at Eames and Woburn?

Will there be a traffic light, sometime in the future, at Woburn and Eames Street in Wilmington? Will a group of developers, who are planning to develop 15 houselots at a place called Ox Bow Pasture, pay the bill?

Joseph A. Langone, Domenic L. Germano, Carleton H. Traywick, Jr., and Carleton H. Traywick, Sr., are those developers. They have filed a suit in Land Court against members of the Wilmington planning Board. Their attorney is Roy D. Toulon, Jr. of 5 Middlesex Avenue, Wilmington.

The five defendants, all members of the planning board are Carole Hamilton, David J. Clark, William G. Hooper, Jr., Nancy Stouffer and Michael McCoy.

Ox Bow Pasture is the name of a tract of land opposite Eames Street and easterly of Woburn Street in Wilmington. Just south of it is the industrially zoned land of South Wilmington.

The funds for the traffic light are named in Item 12, in a planning board approval for a subdivision of Ox Bow Pasture, on October 7. Item 12 requires that the plaintiffs set aside and deposit, with the Town of Wilmington, a sum of money to construct traffic signals. It further requires that they install traffic signal conduits.

Item 7 in the same approval, also being contested, requires that the plaintiffs set aside a landscaped area at one of the borders of the property. The area is to be 20 feet in depth. Impervious green foliage, not less than eight feet in height, will be required.

The name Ox Bow Pasture goes back 30 years, and possibly more. A real estate development with that name was proposed on that site over 30 years ago.

The proponent lived in a Boston suburb, and felt that it would not pay to subscribe to a local newspaper, to keep abreast of the news. As a consequence he knew nothing of the rezoning being planned in Wilmington at that time, at the time when what is now Interstate Route 93 was being planned.

South Wilmington was rezoned to have industrial land. The proposed street for Ox Bow Pasture was named as the northern bound. The result was a loss of about half the land for housing in the proposed real estate development.

There have been a few attempts to develop the property, with town meeting action. Those attempts failed.

Now four experienced land developers have taken over the problem. Their proposed real estate development has been approved.

But there are two paragraphs in that approval which they do not like. They propose to fight it out in the Land Court.

Town Counsel Alan Altman, in defense, says, among other things, that the complaint was not filed in the applicable period required by statute; that the complaint fails to state a claim on which relief can be granted; they have failed to post a surety or cash bond, as required; and further, that the decision of the planning board is in compliance with the rules and regulations of the Town of Wilmington's Planning Board, duly adopted, and in accordance with the authority granted by the "subdivision control law," contained in Massachusetts General Laws, Chapter 41.

Altman demands judgement for the cost incurred by the defendants as a result of this appeal of the approval for the subdivision.

Charles Boyce elected VP at Diamond Crystal

Charles E. Boyce has been elected to the position of corporate vice president and president of the Packet Products Division. The announcement was made recently by Roy C. Satchell, president and chief executive officer of Diamond Crystal Salt Company. The action was taken yesterday by the company's board of directors at its regular meeting.

Boyce succeeds Robert B. Sonnier who died October 22, 1986. He will report to Satchell and have profit and loss responsibility for the company's Packet Products Division.

Boyce, 61, had been the division's vice president of marketing since 1981. He joined Diamond Crystal in 1948 in field sales for the Salt Division. By 1962 he had risen to manager of broker and distributor sales and in 1965 was promoted to manager of consumer and institutional sales. He was promoted to regional sales manager for the Akron sales office in 1966. From 1973 through 1981 he was marketing manager of the Packet Products Division.

He and his wife will continue to reside in Andover.

Diamond crystal has its corporate offices in St. Clair, MI. The Salt

Division, which produces and distributes various salt products has its headquarters and plant in St. Clair, MI, and plants in Akron, OH, Manistee, MI, and Williston, ND. The Packet Products Division, which manufactures individual food condiment packets, low sodium dietary products and meal service kits has its headquarters and a plant in Wilmington, MA, and a plant in Moore, OK.

Dr. Roberts elected president of Merrimack Valley Chiropractic Association

Dr. Edward G. Roberts of the Roberts Chiropractic Health Care Office in Tewksbury, was recently elected president of the Merrimack Valley Chiropractic Association. The association is the local extension of the Massachusetts Chiropractic Society and includes membership from numerous towns in and around the Merrimack Valley, and as far east as Newburyport.

Dr. Roberts is excited about his new responsibility, and has already planned several activities, including a Christmas toy drive. Another effort will be to contact local health maintenance organizations who fail to provide chiropractic services: insurance companies now must include chiropractic benefits, but the legislation does not at this time apply to maintenance organizations. "This effort is certainly important," says Dr. Roberts, "but the most important function of the society is to provide local chiropractors with continuing education and support, and do everything possible to insure quality chiropractic care for the people of our area."

Dr. Roberts earned a Bachelor of Business Administration from the University of Miami, and the Doctor of Chiropractic from Life

Chiropractic College in Atlanta, Georgia. He established a chiropractic practice in Quincy, Mass. in 1978 and another in Detroit, Michigan in 1982. In 1985, Dr. Roberts brought his family back to Massachusetts and opened his office in Tewksbury. Dr. Roberts says, "We really missed Massachusetts. It's great to be back!"

Tina Allan awarded scholarship

At its annual President's Night held November 14, at Lantana's in Randolph, the Massachusetts Water Works Association presented two $500 scholarships to members' children.

One of the recipients was Tina M. Allan, daughter of George and Diane Allan of Wilmington. Tina, a 1986 graduate of Wilmington High School, is a freshman at Syracuse University where she is majoring in Graphic Design.

The Massachusetts Water Works Association, incorporated in 1950, consists of 1160 professionals dedicated to the development and protection of our water supplies and the exchange of knowledge among those in the water works field. Its scholarship fund is indicative of the Association's commitment to the education of our youth.

Compugraphic forms Font Technologies division

Compugraphic Corporation recently announced the formation of a new division. Font Technologies was created to develop, manufacture and market font products for electronic printing and desktop publishing applications.

"Font Technologies' products answer the needs of virtually any software developer or printer manufacturer whose product images text," said Robert M. Givens, general manager of the new division. "Our products can be integrated into the publishing/text imaging system at any point in the OEM distribution channel, from controllers and printers, through text imaging applications, to turnkey systems," he continued.

Font Technologies will market a variety of font products, from outlines and bitmaps, to Intellifont, a proprietary font scaling technology. Intellifont allows for total OEM flexibility in solving the problems associated with unknown point size requirements and resolutions of output devices. With its low-storage, high-speed means to generate bitmaps, Intellifont is entirely resolution-independent and point size-independent.

The management team includes: Robert Givens, general manager, former international marketing manager for the Compugraphic Equipment Division; Doug Shaw, sales and marketing manager, former international marketing and sales manager for the Type Division; and Thomas Hawkins, technical manager, who has been instrumental in the development of Intellifont.

letter to the editor

Dear Larz:

I'd like to make some remarks about the Wilmington School Committee's position on the disbursement of Chapter 188 professional development money.

It is gratifying to see that members of the committee and the central administration are rediscovering the importance of support for professional development in the teaching staff. Prior to proposition 2 1/2, Wilmington teachers were reimbursed for the cost of courses that contributed to the intellectual well being of the faculty. This "benefit" was negotiated out of the contract because it was considered too expensive (not because of the cost of tuition reimbursement, but because teachers who took courses and who earned advanced degrees were entitled to larger salaries); in effect, the committee came down on the side of affordable mediocrity. In this round of negotiations, however, the committee seems to be in favor of the notions that the teaching staff should keep abreast of current developments, that teachers should be subsidized when they want to broaden their backgrounds, that an active faculty is an effective one, and that the curriculum will be stronger if it is designed and implemented by teachers who are continually in the process of professional renovation. It sounds like the committee is on the right track.

Or is it? A closer look at the committee's position (one which is evidently supported by the central administration) shows some serious problems with its approach to this professional development issue, and, more generally, it shows that the committee is adopting a managerial posture toward the faculty that is outmoded and counterproductive.

The first problem is that the committee wants to force teachers to participate in professional development activities (a teacher must take a course every so often in order to stay on the salary scale). This approach to professional development never shows up in fields other than precollege education, and, even there, it is known to be ineffective. One of the oldest (and truest) facts about classroom teaching is that students will act the way you expect them to act. This is also true in a much more general context; you don't need training in psychology or in management to know that you usually get what you expect to get from people. If the committee tells teachers that they must take a course every three years in order to stay on the salary scale, if it treats teachers as if they are not capable of making decisions about what is best for their own professional development, then we can expect a faculty that goes through the motions. People will take trivial (but administratively sanctioned) courses, they will put little or no work into the courses, and the curriculum will receive only cosmetic improvement. If, on the other hand, teachers are allowed to take courses when they feel that they need to, if they can design their own program of professional development, and if they are viewed as partners in school improvement, then we can expect a revitalization of our curriculum that will be a model of innovation. The point is that faculty members will act like professionals if they are treated like professionals.

The committee is also insisting that the money used for tuition reimbursement come from the Chapter 188 professional development funds; that the funds be distributed by a process that requires teachers to apply to the central administration (the superintendent or his designee), and the decisions about who gets reimbursed be made by the administration. We are told that this is in accordance with the wishes of the "Town Meeting floor."

I was at the (special) Town Meeting when the school committee asked for the approval to apply for these funds. The committee gave an unusually opaque presentation to an audience that was there to talk about rezoning and underground oil tanks. I saw the vote then (as I do now) as simply an affirmation that the town should go after the money. The committee spokesman said several times that he could not describe the methods by which the money would be distributed, because this had to be decided through collective bargaining. The only fact emphasized by the committee was that the money would not be put on the teachers' contract base salary, because this would make salary funding difficult when Chapter 188 expired (no formal vote of endorsement was taken even at this point). So, there is no mandate from the Town Meeting that the money be used in a particular way. We only agreed that the money should be obtained; the negotiating process would decide the specifics of disbursement.

And the school committee is insisting on some curious specifics. There is a portion of Chapter 188 that sets up a grant program for professional development (the "Horace Mann" grants), but this is not the money in question. The funds in question are generally known as the "salary enhancement funds," and most communities in the state, recognizing the temporary nature of the state money, are distributing the money equally to all teachers with the understanding that the money should be used for some form of professional development. This method is simple and philosophically enlightened: it assumes that teachers are professionals, that every teacher is deserving of a professional development stipend, and that teachers are capable of deciding how best to spend the stipend. Even in those communities where a portion of this money is held for tuition reimbursement, decisions about who gets the money are almost always made on the basis of a blind review by a committee consisting mainly of peers.

What the committee is proposing

Almost ready

The new ice arena in Wilmington is not fully open, but the Wilmington High School hockey team has practiced there twice. Other programs are scheduled to begin this weekend.

("grants" given out via a process that is a thin disguise for administrative whim) amounts to the initiation of a merit pay system. It isn't necessary to go into a discussion of the dangers of merit pay; it's enough to note that merit pay is clearly not the intent of Chapter 188, nor is there any mandate for such a system from the Town Meeting (or anywhere else).

If the committee wants to engage in top down management, if it wants to treat the faculty as an adversary, and if it wants educational policy in this town to be a sterile creation of the administration, then it should say so; it should not hide behind "will of the people" or "intent of the legislation" arguments that are flimsy and misleading.

The committee's rejection of a partnership with the faculty is one of the real tragedies in the current stalemate between teachers and school officials. In truly effective school systems, students, parents, teachers and administrators work together in an atmosphere of mutual respect. The current school committee stance on professional development shows that it wants no such coalition; it wants to dictate policy to the faculty, and it wants no input from the professionals who are in daily contact with our children. This is not a position that is taken by a school committee dedicated to intellectual development in the faculty, and it discredits the committee's claim that it has a renewed esteem for the value of professional development.

Wilmington has always been a town that cares about education; the ongoing renovation of the high school is an example of the dedication that we have to our schools. But the best facilities in the country are no substitute for a teaching staff that is actively involved with the formulation of educational policy. The school committee should take a good look at its treatment of its most valuable asset.

Sincerely,
Albert A. Cuoco

Aylward, Redmen whip Wildcats, 37-8

Second place for Redmen

by Rick Cooke
Sports Editor

Tewksbury High School football coach Bob Aylward said it all about his senior son just prior to the fifty-second Thanksgiving morning meeting between the Redmen and the Wildcats.

"Brian is just a leader out there on the field," praised a justifiably proud father. "He's the best two-way player we've ever had here at Tewksbury. He is just an inspiration in so many ways, and when he makes mistakes it's because he was making the second effort."

Brian Aylward led the Redmen in tackles for three seasons, sparking a defense that drove the Redmen to a Division Two Super Bowl championship. He was the leader among a superb senior class that went 18-2 over the past two seasons at TMHS.

I almost forgot. Fullback Brian, who had not played quarterback since his freshman season, went out and led the Redmen to five touchdowns in the first six offensive series he directed subbing for injured junior Jay Rideout (elbow), as the Redmen simply outmanned the winless Wilmington Wildcats, 37-8 at Alumni Field Thursday morning.

The victory left the Redmen at 8-2-0 on the season and in second place in the MVC behind conference champion Lowell (9-1-0).

Tewksbury's two losses were by a combined total of two points to Lowell (7-6) and Andover (15-14).

The Andover setback knocked the Redmen out of contention for their second straight Division Two Super Bowl appearance.

Bridgewater-Raynham (10-0), last year's TMHS bowl foe, will tangle with Xaverian (10-0) for Division Two honors Saturday at Sullivan Stadium.

For coach Ed Harrison's Wildcats, they went winless for the first time since 1956 and suffered their worst defeat in this game since the Redmen won 38-14 in 1958.

The time might be now for the Wildcats to shift to the Cape Ann League. There is talent on this team that will be returning next season for a fresh start, but as one TMHS coach noted as time wound down Thursday, the Wilmington numbers might not be there to compete consistently in the tough MVC.

Wilmington did come out posing a legitimate passing threat, but a couple of dropped passes set them back early, and the Redmen behind the senior backfield of Aylward, Tim Boudreau and Kenn Coviello took over behind the blocking of linemen Mike Fitzpatrick, Dave French, Jay Kelley, Dan Britten, John Marsh and Brian French.

Boudreau concluded his 88 point season with three touchdown scampers of 11, six and 30 yards to finish with 13 TD's.

For fellow senior Kenn Coviello, this game was a fitting climax to a gut-check of a season and a four-year TMHS career in the starting backfield. The only four year starter in TMHS football history ran for 128 yards and touchdowns of 29 and 20 yards to give him eight TD's for the season.

His last TD was a bolt over left tackle that saw Kenn cruise in untouched. Kenn's dad got it all on tape. Any future TMHS running back who wants to know what it's like to survive a season of nagging leg injuries should take a seat and view this particular piece of film.

Senior guard and placekicker Dave French erased all memories of his midseason kicking slump with four perfect PAT's. He also earned some praise from his coach. "Dave is the best guard in the league. He's just one heck of a player," noted Aylward.

Tewksbury jumped out to a 21-0 lead while many fans were still waiting in line buying tickets. The count was up to 35-0 by halftime and it was the second TMHS unit led by sophomore quarterback Dave Boudreau that took the controls over the final half of the season.

Tewksbury notched a safety for its final points of 1986, while the Wildcats avoided the shutout when talented junior quarterback Dan Woods (174 yards passing) found senior co-captain Tom Pote with an 18 yard scoring strike.

Dave French earned the first annual James E. Brooks Award for being selected the most valuable lineman for his team. For Wilmington the honors went to senior tackle David Kelley.

The victory gave the Redmen two straight in the series after they had dropped a pair in a row. The TMHS advantage now stands at 26-19-7 in the series.

While Wilmington returns many players including Woods, running back Don Sullivan, punter Dick Hersom, receiver Pat Nally and linemen John Rago, C.J. Barber and Butch McGovern, the Redmen are losing a batch of people from what is the most talented senior class in Aylward's 13 years at the helm.

The entire starting backfield with the exception of Rideout graduates along with defensive tackle Brian Donahue ("The best technique in the league," -Aylward), nose guard Fitzpatrick ("He has been dominant in the middle for us," -Aylward) and the entire offense line with the exception of junior guard Brian French.

But Aylward sees light at the end of the graduation tunnel. "We have a beautiful work ethic here," offered the TMHS coach. "These kids are looking to be worked hard. They are all overachievers that make one-hundred percent commitment. For us, winning is simply a byproduct of effort."

For the Wildcats and Harrison, their winless season was not without its' bright spots,

Boudreau pulls away

Tewksbury High School senior running back Tim Boudreau pulls away from Wildcats George McDonald (60), John Rago (53) and Don Sullivan (44) enroute to one of his three touchdowns in Tewksbury's 37-8 rout of Wilmington. Tim ran for 13 touchdowns this season for Tewksbury.

The Redmen completed their season with an 8-2 record that was good enough for second place in the MVC. The Wildcats finished at 0-10 for their season.

Inspect Your Fireplace and Chimney

- Inspect the flue for obstructions and creosote build-up. Also look for damage to bricks or tile liners. If you suspect any of these problems, call a professional chimney sweep or inspector.

During your spring clean-up activities, don't neglect your fireplace and chimney. The end of the heating season is a good time to check the condition of any woodburning appliances and chimneys that you use.

The Wood Heating Alliance, a non-profit organization that promotes the safe use of wood and coal energy, offers the following fireplace safety advice for homeowners.

- Inspect the roof in the area of the chimney and remove any obstructions or foreign material.
- Inspect the chimney top housing, remove any obstructions, and clean the bird guard screen. (If you don't have a screen, now is the time to install one.)

Check Boiler's Operation

As much as 40 percent of the money you spend to heat your home could be going right up your chimney because of an inefficient hot water or steam boiler. Efficiency, the measure of how well your boiler converts fuel into useful heat, plays one of the most important parts in determining your home heating cost. An inefficient boiler may require 25 or 30 percent more fuel to provide the same level of comfort as a modern, high-efficiency unit.

First, have a qualified heating contractor, fuel oil dealer or utility audit your heating system to determine how efficient it really is. Older boilers simply weren't designed for maximum efficiency.

Your boiler might just need cleaning and adjusting. Built-up soot reduces the amount of useful heat produced. Then make sure your boiler is the right size. An oversized boiler actually produces heat less efficiently.

If your boiler is more than 10 years old, your best choice may be replacing it with a new, high-efficiency boiler.

Ask your heating contractor to show you not only how much a new boiler will cost, but also how much money it would have saved compared to your last year's fuel bill. In many cases, you'll find that a new high-efficiency boiler can pay for itself in as little as three or four years.

Surround With Efficient, Comfortable Hydronic Heat

If your house is heated with a boiler that's more than 10 years old, updating your heating system with the latest in modern hydronic equipment could be a sound long-term investment. For the average homeowner, installing a high-efficiency boiler can translate into big savings on home fuel usage.

The VHE gas boiler uses advanced design technology to achieve its 87-percent efficiency rating. It has a built-in heat exchanger and blower fan, plus an automatic flue gas close-off that retains heat that normally escapes up the chimney.

The VHE boiler can be vented directly outside your home, just like a clothes dryer. No chimney is required. This feature, plus its compact size, means the boiler can be installed nearly anywhere.

Take advantage of the designs now available in home heating equipment. Consult a heating contractor to determine the exact cost and the savings that can result.

Reading Light to rebate excess revenues

Chairman John H. Crooker has announced for the Reading Municipal Light Board (RMLD) that the December bills for all classes of customers will include a $1,264,000 credit due to sales growth in 1986 that has produced revenues in excess of that projected when the department filed its March 1, 1986 rates. Approximately $836,000 will be returned to commercial customers including municipal use and $428,000, to residents. The sales growth was accomplished without increasing peak demand.

Excess revenues for all classes were determined by utilizing the same cost of service methods which were used in that rate filing.

Individual customer credits have been determined by multiplying the expected percentage of excess revenues in each customer class by the total of the individual customer's actual January through October billings less prompt payment, fuel charge and residential

New York Power Authority credit. This procedure is in line with Reading Municipal Light Department's stated policy of providing electric energy at the lowest permissible cost. This credit does not effect existing rate schedules.

The average credit for each customer class based on the December billing will be 45.8 percent for A-residential and 45.1 percent for C-commercial.

Credits may vary by individual customers depending on yearly use.

In December the fuel charge will continue to be 1.75 cents per KWH and the residential New York Power Authority credit will be $7.30.

The board for the RMLD consists of John H. Crooker, chairman; Allan E. Ames, secretary, and Frederick J. Nemergut, member. All are elected by the Reading town election.

Norbert D. Rhinerson is general manager.

Permission granted to build four homes

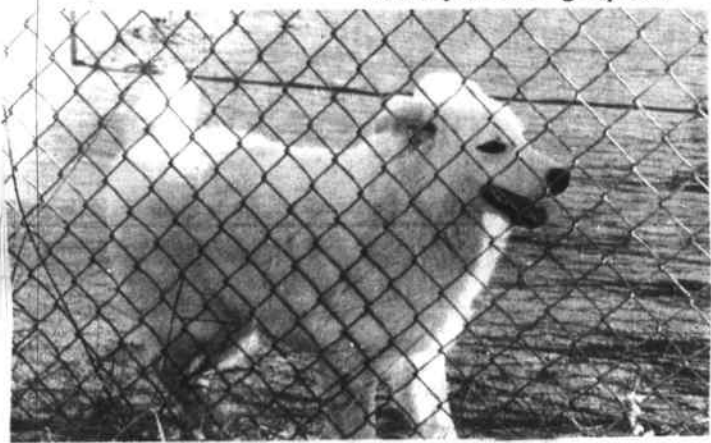

The Wilmington Board of Appeals has granted a special permit to the BCT Realty Trust, 117 Glen Road, Wilmington, to construct four homes on Adams Street (formerly Young Street). The hearing was held November 10 and was necessary because Young Street was not a part of the Official Map of Wilmington. Streets which had no homes on them lost their right to be shown on the Official Map by reason of a state law adopted by the town meeting about a dozen years ago.

The decision was filed with the town clerk on November 26. Attorney Daniel Brown represented the appellants.

About a dozen neighbors from the Parker Street area appeared in opposition. They told the board that water problems existed in the area. Chairman Bruce MacDonald several times had to tell the audience that water problems in real estate development are handled by the Conservation Commission.

Appearances will have to be made by the appellant before that commission and before the Board of Health before building permits are issued by the building inspector.

Homes needed

The Wilmington dog catcher seems to be having a Christmas special on white dogs. The Samoyed female above was found on Everett Avenue last week. There is also two other white dogs available for adoption. Call 658-2608.

Town meeting ...

for state-subsidized housing.

She also said that she was against opening up the cul de sac on Reed Street, which would allow traffic to cut through as a short-cut.

Mary Cunningham of Fairmeadow Road told how the Chisholms had bought the land 52 years ago. She charged that the abutters were using the openness of the Chisholm land to enhance their own land.

"Why didn't they buy a house on a prairie?" she said.

Chisholm's sister, Alice Sheaffer, opened one salvo after another at the neighbors. "They're going to miss all those free woods," she said. "They'll have to teach their children to stay out of the road, to use the sidewalks."

She accused them of being "kind of snobbish."

Both the Planning Board and the Finance Committee recommended disapproval of the article. Planning Board Chairman Carole Hamilton said that one argument against rezoning was that the abutting land was R60. People moving in knew the land was R60 and had reasonable expectations that abutting property would be developed in the same manner.

Fincom Chairman Anita Backman said there was no definite plan. "Maybe if he comes in with one later, we'll think differently."

Selectman Jim Stewart, chairman of the Affordable Housing Task Force, said that with no guarantee, there was really no proposal. He said that Chisholm's proposal did not give a guarantee of affordable housing.

Chisholm then took several minutes to sum up, after the question had been moved.

He gave the first hint of how his proposal for affordable housing would work. Every fourth house in the subdivision, he said, would be sold for no more than $86,000. He said that his word was all that he could give the town meeting, and that it would have to do.

The article lost, 45 to 207.

Also going down in flames was a proposal by Al Fiorenza to rezone land on West Street, to allow the Casa di Fior function hall to move across the street. The proposal to move the business across the street stems from the proposed relocation of West Street, which would take an office building owned by Fiorenza, and impair the access to the function hall.

The area has become heavily industrialized in the past 20 years, much to the chagrin of people living in the area.

Roy Parsons, who lives in a house that would be sold to Fiorenza under the proposal, said that he was in favor of it, because it was his one chance to get out of there.

Scott Kent called that a good argument against the article.

Fiorenza received support from selectmen Dan Ballou, Bob Cain and Rocco DePasquale.

"It's obvious that this property is not near a selectman's house," said Mary Ducey of Hilltop Road.

The article lost, 147 to 174.

Steve Lawrenson was successful in rezoning a parcel of about six acres in North Wilmington Center to general business. The land is adjacent to land he had rezoned at the annual town meeting in April. The article passed, 159 to 39.

The warrant also included an article for transferring money. A transfer of $141,000 to trash removal went through easily. The money was transferred from money received from the cleanup of Hurricane Gloria, and from free cash.

A $9000 transfer to cover hiring a temporary intern to catalog town owned land ran into difficulty, not so much for where the money was going, but rather for where it was coming from, namely the Conservation Commission budget for hiring an administrator. The annual town meeting had voted $21,800 for that position in April, but the town manager has yet to fill the position. Because the money is for an annual salary, there is now about $9000 in that account which cannot be spent, unless transferred.

But taking the money away from the Conservation Commission was, in effect, a red flag in front of a bull. Debate on the matter went for nearly an hour.

Conservation Commission Chairman Chester Bruce said he favored the hiring of someone to catalog the land, but objected to the money coming from concomm funds. He wanted to know how much money remained in free cash.

Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski explained his priority of protecting the free cash account, unexpended funds which can then be included in the following year's budget. Last year, the town had $577,000 in free cash. After the transfer to rubbish removal, there was $485,127 left.

Jim Stewart said the town meeting last year had put a moratorium on the sale of town owned land. He said that the town had a mandate to catalog its land before the moratorium lifted in April 1988.

Rep. Jim Miceli objected to the transfer, and called for the town to aggressively buy more land.

"Dan Devine said that the town meeting had given Stapczynski a mandate to hire a conservation administrator. He pointed out that this made two mandates the town manager hadn't fulfilled.

The matter was eventually cleared up after Mitch Sping proposed taking the money from free cash. The amendment and the transfer passed with only one vote opposed.

Prepared an extra plate

To the seniors we asked to prepare an extra dinner plate on Thanksgiving Day and deliver it to a shut-in senior, we thank you very much. We know how much pleasure you brought to these less fortunate seniors.

WRKO Radio happy

Roger Allen of WRKO Radio was ecstatically happy with the large number of seniors who unselfishly gave many volunteer hours packaging approximately 40,000 articles which will be distributed to over 10,000 disadvantaged children at Christmas. Mr. Allen said the Wilmington senior citizens are a wonderful group of people to have so much feeling for young people in need of help.

Successful fair

The arts and crafts senior fair was held at the Senior Center last Saturday. It was very successful. This could not have happened if it were not for all the hard working senior men and women who filled the tables in the function room with so many beautiful craft articles; the large number of articles which was raffled off, all the baked goods, the men and women who worked hard cooking and serving meals in the kitchen, and those who worked behind the tables. Thank you, one and all.

A beautiful day

Special thanks go to God for the beautiful day he gave us and to Ron Rybert of Plate Escape for the donation of cups, Sweetheart Plastics for the donation of plastic supplies, Rep. Wilmington police news

Seven persons were arrested at Avco on Nov. 25, at the entrance to the plant, at a request from Avco Security. They were arrested after refusing to leave the property when requested to do so.

Four of the seven had been arrested at Avco on previous occasions.

Two of the seven were operating video tapes, discovered after the arrest when a custodial search revealed hidden voice transmitters taped to their bodies, under their clothing.

Charged with trespassing were Agnes Bauerlein, Ambler, Pennsylvania; Julie Gustafson of 431 Broome Street and Kenneth Schafer of Washington Square, both of New York City; John Petito of Princeton, N.H.; John Pendleton of Providence, R.I.; Jean Holliday of Dorchester and John Schuchart of Leverett, Massachusetts.

Additional charges were placed against Bauerlein and Schuchart when the search revealed the hidden voice transmitters. They were charged with a violation of the state wiretap law, covering the interception of oral communications and the possession of such devices with intent to record conversation without warning to the people being recorded.

Their cases were continued, at Woburn Court, for two weeks.

Arrested Saturday, shortly after midnight was Christopher J. Dawe, 19, of Derry, N.H. The arrest was by Officer Jim White.

Dawe was arrested for operating under the influence, speeding, and failing to stop for an officer.

Placed under protective custody and then arrested was James Johnson, 18, of North Reading, after a computer check revealed outstanding warrants from Attleboro and the State Police in Andover.

At 2:30 a.m. Saturday morning Lynne-Marie Bolack, 33, of Lawrence was arrested by Officer Bob Richter and charged with operating while under the influence of alcohol.

Also arrested by Richter was Stanley T. Kotoski, 23, of 31 Oakdale Rd., Wilmington and was charged with operating while under the influence.

Nutcracker is a tradition

It's Christmas Eve in a small German town in the year 1812. At the home of Col. Silberhaus, family and guests have gathered to celebrate. While the children share the toys under the tree, their parents enjoy a contra-dance. Suddenly a hush falls over the room as the elegant and mysterious Dr. Drosselmeyer arrives. The children are fascinated with the life-size mechanical toys he has created, but none more so than Clara, the host's teenage daughter, when he presents to her a wooden nutcracker carved in the form of a British Grenadier.

Later that night Drosselmeyer will lead her through a world of fantasy which begins when the Christmas Tree grows to double its height. She will help to defeat the giant Mouse-King in the battle of the Mice and Toy Soldiers, to release the Nutcracker-Prince from the evil spell which holds him in a wooden form, and together they will journey through Winterland to the Prince's kingdom in the Land of Sweets, where the court is entertained by dancing confections from many countries.

This is the traditional story of "The Nutcracker," adapted from the tale by Hoffman, which the Winchester Ballet Theatre will present in full length at the Winchester High School auditorium on Dec. 12 and 13.

Unlike most Boston area companies who fill their "Nutcracker" casts with many young children, the W.B.T.'s

Holiday cornucopia

FM TALK: A cornucopia of thoughts crossed our far-flung correspondent's mind over the holiday weekend:

An English computer scientist who recently settled into the Shaker Glen Village apartment complex in West Woburn had some pretty interesting and light-hearted comments to make upon discovering the traffic hassles of the Four Corners section of his new hometown: "It's a good argument for a nuclear war!" he jovially remarked to this columnist. "There must be more fast food restaurants within two blocks than any place in the USA. And that's the best you can say about it." This English gent emphasized, however, that he was not putting down America in general, merely the tiny strip known as the Four Corners. "It's the worst traffic planning that I've seen in Massachusetts. What a thing to have to say!" Don't feel sorry, chap. There are quite a few of us who feel the same way about the traffic mess at the Four Corners. And to think this fellow comes from a country where people drive on the opposite side of the road!

THE ALZA CORP. in Palo Alto, Calif., has developed an alternative to painful periodontal surgery. It is a thin, hollow, polymer thread filled with the antibiotic tetracycline. The thread is inserted between the teeth and the infected gums. The thread then slowly releases a high dose of the antibiotic directly into the infected region.

A history of Winchester, Part II

From old road to 'Boston Pearl'

By JIM ROUILLARD

Corduroy roads and dame schools, deafness and bounties on wolves' heads, coal black steed, pale horse and pale rider — all have figured in the history of Winchester, since the coming of the white man to New England.

The story of Winchester — called Waterfield in its early days — began like its parent community of Charlestown at the edge of what in 1638 was vast wilderness.

For Waterfield's first settlers it started in reportedly tame and cordial relations with the friendly and gentle "Indian Queen of Misticke," the Squaw Sachem, and evolved from 1638 on into a process of taming that wilderness.

And that process, reports Henry Chapman, involved constructing "corduroyed" approaches to the first bridge across Horn Pond River, "though, the place was so boggy that it swallowed up much lumber before it could be made passable," according to Woburn Records of 1641.

The process continued, Chapman relates in his "History of Winchester," through orthodoxy, deafness and dame schools.

With the Long Bridge completed over Horn Pond River in 1641 — an occasion, by the way, for fasting and prayer, the way was made clear for traffic from Charlestown and Medford to the newly determined site of Woburn Village — Waterfield's second parent town.

And what was that traffic?

Chapman: "It must be remembered that in the early days roads were used mainly as a means of getting either to the grist mill or the church. Farms were self-contained units then; they supplied the food, fuel and the clothing for the family... Their corn had to be ground for them, however, and they had to go to church — or thought they had."

Chapman draws a picturesque, untame portrait of the Winchester region prior to 1700: It is forest-clad, with "pine and spruce and hemlock predominating on the high land and hard woods on the valley floor."

"Here and there among the trees clearings are to be seen, laboriously made for corn and pasture land, and in each clearing stands a house — not much more than a dozen or fifteen in all. A few rough roads connect the scattered farms, and on the winding Aberjona there are two small mills, the Converse gristmill at the center and the Symmes mill not far from Mystic Lake. The nearest church is two miles or more away at Woburn Common.

"The woods are still full of wild beasts, bears are common, and wolves are a continual menace, for they prey savagely on the sheep, on the wool of which the settlers depend for all their homespun clothing."

"Liberal bounties on wolves were paid by the town of Woburn from the first. The records abound in payments — usually of ten shillings, which is equivalent to fifteen dollars or more of present-day (1936) money — to citizens who had delivered a wolf's head 'with the ears' to the town treasury."

And the Winchester settlers' lives?

"Life was hard and unremitting upon these farms... especially hard in the early days... On Sunday there were the church services, which

Nutcracker

Dancers are mostly adults. The W.B.T.'s version resembles those of the Royal Ballet and American Ballet Theatre in that Clara and the Nutcracker are the central characters and dance throughout both Acts I and II. Drosselmeyer is also a major role as he leads the couple through their adventures. With a cast of 15 men and 21 women, ages ranging from early teens through senior citizens, and representing 20 different communities, the W.B.T.'s 6th annual "Nutcracker" is created for all ages who enjoy an old-fashioned Christmas tale.

Of the 21 women in the cast, 13 are adults of varying professions for whom the W.B.T. provides an outlet for their long-time interest in classical ballet. Several have had extensive dance training, such as Elizabeth Hawkes, a Wilmington resident, formerly of London, England, who studied under the Royal Academy system. Karen Surratt of Reading, recipient of a bachelor of arts degree in dance from the Boston Conservatory, and Linda Lazzaro of Chelsea, with a bachelor of arts degree in creative arts from Bradford College. These girls will be dancing with the W.B.T. for the first time. Jody Power, also of Reading, a lab technician at Choate Symmes Hospital and aerobics instructor, has performed with the W.B.T. since 1981.

Margaret Sullivan of Burlington, an executive secretary employed by the USAF, who first danced with the W.B.T. in 1980, is joined this year by her daughter, Bonnie Sullivan, a high school freshman who trained with the Berkshire Ballet and other theater groups before coming to the W.B.T. Kimberly Morrow, a Woburn High School senior, has performed in six consecutive W.B.T. productions since 1980, and this season dances the role of the Sugar Plum Fairy.

Amber Williamson, a freshman at Winchester High School, and her father, Ronald Williamson, appear for their third season, and the youngest member, Gretchen Everhart, also of Winchester, has appeared in the Danbury Burdett production of "The Nutcracker" in Connecticut where she began training six years ago.

The role of Clara will be danced by Darlene Wigton, director and choreographer of the W.B.T. Ms. Wigton, a resident of Woburn, began dance studies in Winchester and Woburn as a child and was privately and personally trained by the late Harriet Hootor. She began teacher training at age 14 and was assistant instructor to Harriet Hootor while continuing intensive dance studies in Boston. After graduating with highest honors from Lexington Christian Academy, she furthered her dance education at the Hartford Conservatory of Music and studied with such recognized performers as Alexandra Danilova of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo and the New York City Ballet Co.; Eric Cooper, Hollywood dancer and choreographer for television and movies; and Margarite de Anguera with the Connecticut Valley Ballet. She worked with several regional companies until opening the Winchester School of Ballet in 1977 at the Crawford Memorial Methodist Church in Winchester.

Lincoln Clark III, a Chelmsford resident, a U.S. Army Reserve staff sergeant with the data processing unit at Hanscom Air Force Base, and employed at Boston University as assistant computer operations manager, will portray the Nutcracker-Prince. Clark's previous experience includes productions at Gettysburg College where he holds a bachelor of arts in history.

David, Jeffry and Eric Workman, all of Wakefield, had a very unusual beginning in that a mutual interest in military history first brought the founding members together. Wigton and Clark met in 1974 as members of the British 10th Regiment of Foot and later encountered the Workman brothers, all members of the Massachusetts 2nd regiment as "enemies" at 18th century battle re-enactments.

In addition to Clark and Wigton, seven other men who dance with the W.B.T. are 10th Regiment members, including Mark Vander Berg of Brookline, a professional in corporate new ventures at Gillette Co., Carson Hovey of Nashua, N.H., a software engineer at Digital and Ted Clark, a student at Stoneham High School, who plays the role of Clara's brother, Fritz.

The unit was founded in 1968 by Hollywood actor, writer, photographer and make-up artist, Col. Vincent J-R Kehoe, residing in Chelmsford, to portray the British 10th Regiment as it appeared in Lexington on April 19, 1775, and was given official recognition by the Royal Lincolnshire Regimental Association as the servances in the eastern U.S., members have performed in London and Lincoln, England and Canada, providing an honor guard and standing in review for various British dignitaries, including Queen Elizabeth II in 1976, and Prince Charles during his visit to Boston earlier this year, and most recently were filmed at Lexington Green for an episode of "Spenser for Hire."

Wigton, who was accepted as a member of the Company of Military Historians for research, illustration and reproduction of military uniforms, displays this interest through many of the costumes in "The Nutcracker." The Toy Soldiers are uniformed as 10th Regiment grenadiers, while the male guests at the Christmas party represent various German units of the Napoleonic era, all constructed by Wigton, using actual cut and patterns of the period, but using polyester, synthetic fur and sequin in place of wool, bearskin and brass, with a few modifications to aid the quick-change artists that some dancers have, of necessity, become!

The busiest of those are Jeffrey Workman, whose talents include singing and composing and recently appeared in the Reading Colonial Players' "Oliver", and Eric Workman, photographer and electronic innovator who is a producer, sound and cameraman with the Warner Cable Television. Both dance several roles that require eight costume changes.

The other costumes, all designed by Wigton and her assistant (and mother) Gladys Wigton, also reflect a thorough knowledge of period dress and experience gained as living history interpreters at Minuteman National Historical Park since 1974, particularly the lavish formal 18th century dress and white wigs used in Act II.

The wooden nutcracker used in the production was hand carved by David Workman, portrait and doll artist by profession, who dances the role of Drosselmeyer, and has created many of the "weapons" and props.

Of particular interest to seniors are Clara's grandparents, played by Col. and Mrs. David Washburn, USAF (ret.), residents of Lexington. For many years Mary Washburn has performed and organized theatrical productions here and overseas, and first met Ms. Wigton when she was a student in the 5th grade Sunday School class which the Washburns were teaching.

"The Nutcracker" performance times are 8 p.m. on Friday and Saturday, Dec. 12 and Dec. 13. Tickets are $8 at the door and $7 when purchased in advance. They may be purchased at Lucky Lady Boutique, O'Neil's Pharmacy and Bookends in Winchester; Bell's Camera Shop in Burlington; Bethany's Card and Gift Shop in Wakefield; and The Boston Organ and Piano Co. in Reading. For senior citizens discount, group rates or other information, contact the Winchester Ballet Company at 933-

After about ten days the thread is removed. According to the company, no application has yet been made to the Food and Drug Administration for approval of the technique. WHILE ON the subject of health, many of you readers know how strongly I believe in taking vitamin C, particularly during the winter. Many people, including some scientists, are skeptical about just how beneficial vitamin C can be. At a recent conference at the New York Academy of Science new data was presented that reinforces the theory that the vitamin is indeed beneficial in some cases. Notwithstanding the fact that normal, well-nourished individuals' bodies can absorb only about the amount of vitamin C contained in a glass of orange juice, the conference revealed that in some cases heavy doses of the vitamin can be helpful. For example, your body doubles its need for vitamin C when it is healing from damage caused by frostbite, severe burns, major surgery, cancer, heavy alcohol intake and cigarette smoking. Biologist Earl B. Dawson of the University of Texas indicates that vitamin C plays a vital role in male fertility. That's enough reason right there for this columnist to take vitamin C.

I RECENTLY met up with a young fellow who is an exterminator by trade, and he actually claims that dead cockroaches that end up in your food, say, in a restaurant won't harm your health. He says dead cockroaches are made up of protein, and if one managed to get ground up into your hamburger, you'd never know it. This may be the case, but I'd just as soon pass, thank you...I'M THE first person to admit that I love Bruce Springsteen, but even I'm getting a little tired of hearing his new record set being played to death on some local radio stations.

SCOTT COLLINS, a popular local bartender who originally hails from Arizona, recently had his wisdom teeth removed. "I looked like a chipmunk," he says. "I was embarrassed to go out in the public." Then the handsome little devil discovered that people mistook him for a poor little kid with a deformed countenance. "Hey, I was finding that people were stepping aside to let me get to the front of the line. I started to think, this isn't such a bad deal. I don't have to wait for my ice cream at Brigham's." The problem is, the swelling eventually went down, and now poor little Scotty has to wait for his Oreo Cookie ice cream cone just like the rest of us.

LET'S TALK sports for a while. I was very disappointed in the recent network, pre-football game show that focused on, and made an unnecessary big deal out of, the issue of black coaches in the NFL. Perhaps it is true that there are no black head coaches. It is just a matter of time before an NFL team everyone who was physically able was supposed to attend. Indeed they were glad to attend them, not only as a religious duty but as a social opportunity — almost the only one offered to see and talk with their neighbors.

Winchester

"It is hard for the modern reader to realize how closely the Puritan church and the Puritan town interlocked. The church 'was' the town, and the town 'was' the church. No one could even move into town and get land to live on unless he was accepted on grounds of religious orthodoxy.

"It was part of the selectmen's duty to see that people went to church, behaved themselves there — and elsewhere — and brought up their children properly."

With the selectmen attending to morals and oversight of others' behavior, the Woburn company militia was free to develop, with three of its earliest high-ranking officers hailing from within the bounds of present-day Winchester.

Among these three, John Garter remained captain until 1690, when he was well past 70. In fact, Chapman reports, he had to be petitioned out of his captaincy, on account of his "great age and extraordinary deafness."

A "warrant for the press" (impressment of a certain number of citizens for military service outside the town) had been issued, and Carter's son had to shout the fact so loudly to his father "that many others in the street heard him, upon which report the young men absconded."

As for early schools, in Chapman's view, most Winchester boys and girls of the 17th and for much of the 18th century probably learned to read, spell and write, "at their mother's knee, or at most in a little 'dame school,' kept by some worthy widow or spinster in one room of the family house, in exchange for a small fee paid for by the parents."

Chapman devotes a chapter to "Eighteenth Century

Memories," which is by itself worth reading in its entirety. Though based mainly on legends, it tells tales of a black horse, witchcraft, and death for two by freezing on "Cold Friday."

The witch involves "Witch Belknap," spinster of a prominent early family. She was reputed to haunt the fields through which Cross Street then ran, constituting herself guardian of the gate which in those days had to be opened when any vehicle or horseman wanted to pass through the lane.

Chapman: "It was reported — and believed — that once when a rider leaped his horse over the gate instead of opening it the 'witch' suddenly appeared out of the bushes, jumped on the horse's back, and steadying herself with her hands upon the rider's shoulders rode so, nearly half a mile to Richardson's Row, to the astonishment and terror of both man and horse."

"When the witch jumped down she cried out to the rider that she would see him again when he passed that way — which she did, according to the man's account, in the form of a crow that pecked viciously at his eyes."

Cold Friday came in January of 1810. Two Woburn men, according to Chapman, had climbed Horn Pond Mountain to cut wood on the bitterly cold day: "The men perhaps tried to keep the frost out of their blood by the internal application of Meford rum, and carried the treatment too far. Whether or not an injustice is done them by such a suggestion, the fact is they did not return home when expected, and a searching party discovered their bodies lying in the snow, frozen stiff."

And so the black horse, "a coal black steed trotting gaily away to an unknown destination," according to Chapman. Actually, the black horse involved more prose than poetry, for it was the Black Horse Tavern, a tavern, hostelry and place of entertainment for nearly a hundred years, built between 1724 and 1728 on what is now Main Street, just a few rods north of the then Woburn-Medford line.

By far the most pretentious house that Winchester had yet seen, it was called a "mansion house" by its owner, and is described by Chapman as "rather an imposing dwelling designed with some taste."

Not originally meant to be a tavern, it was sold in 1728, as perhaps too expensive a mansion for its owner's use — and its new owner entertained a lot of troopers from cavalry regiments there. Sold again in 1743, it was "frankly a tavern," from this time on, according to Chapman.

"Through all its long history the Black Horse Tavern was a successful and well-managed hostelry. It was a favorite stopping place for travelers overtaken by darkness or bad weather on their way to and from Boston, and it was especially well patronized by farmers on their way to the city market."

"The tavern was the most important institution hereabouts; for a time it actually gave its name to the settlement around it. During the latter half of the 18th century Winchester was most frequently called Black Horse Village."

In Revolutionary times it became, like other taverns in other towns, the meeting place for soldiers as well as citizens.

As for Winchester's minutemen, they weren't quite up to the minute, in one sense at least. Woburn was almost the last town in Middlesex County to vote to raise a company of minutemen — on April 17, 1775.

"Quite evidently the influential men of Woburn thought minutemen unnecessary, having three excellent militia companies and a newly enlisted company of artillery, 'well equipped and exercising daily without expense to the town,'" Chapman wrote.

But Winchester apportioned its quota of patriots to Lexington, the retreat from Concord and later Revolutionary events. Among the folk tales, one "has to do with the gray-headed Yankee horseman mounted on a powerful steed, who harassed the British during their retreat from Concord and who, though he killed or wounded a number of redcoats, himself bore a charmed life among the bullets that showered around him," according to Chapman.

"This remarkable 'white horseman,'" he continues, was a Winchester man, Hezekiah Wyman... (who was) 55 on the morning of the Lexington alarm... On the morning of the battle he had, so the story goes, early news of the British advance on Lexington. In spite of his age he determined to bear his part, and though his wife remonstrated with him, he mounted his strong white mare and, musket in hand, set off at a gallop for Lexington.

"He was too late for the fighting at the Common, as the other Woburn men were, but riding his horse up the Concord road he came face to face with the returning British soldiers. He rode at them furiously, discharging his piece, and a redcoat fell. Spurring his mare over the stone wall into the field, he reloaded and returned to the attack. Again and again he rode at the enemy, always getting his man, but always escaping unhurt himself."

The Boston "Pearl," published the earliest known printed version of the white horseman, sometime before 1840, according to Chapman, who provided an excerpt:

owner moves one of these black coaches into the rank of head coach. I am not in favor of an owner being told by Jesse Jackson that he must promote an assistant black coach to head coach. After all, football teams are businesses first, and owners operate them to hopefully make money. The owner must be left free to decide who will run his team. Sooner or later, an assistant black coach will be at the helm of an NFL team, and just as they have proved to be effective in coaching basketball teams and baseball teams, they will eventually prove that they can also run a football team.

WHAT WOULD the holidays be without new films premiering at the cinemas? There are a few good ones coming, and a few turkeys. Among the ones to catch: "The Mosquito Coast," with Harrison Ford; "The Golden Child," Eddie Murphy's follow-up film to "Beverly Hills Cop"; "Crimes of the Heart," starring Sissy Spacek, Jessica Lange and Diane Keaton; "No Mercy," with Richard Gere; "Little Shop of Horrors," with Rick Moranis, Steve Martin and Bill Murray; "Brighton Beach Memoirs," an adaptation of the hit Neil Simon, semi-autobiographical play; and "The Platoon," which may prove to be the sleeper of the Christmas season. Among the films to avoid: "King Kong Lives," "Heartbreak Ridge," and "The Morning After."

WINCHESTER AFFLUENT 20th CENTURY TOWN, welcomes visitors. But the prosaic nature of a modern welcome conceals a history involving tales of witchcraft, a coal-black steed, and another horse — pale, with a pale rider.

breeze, and the color of his horse distinguished him from the other Americans; the British called him 'Death on the Pale Horse'... Once a bayonet charge drove him off, but ere long he was returning to the charge and this time he killed an officer. His powerful white horse, careening at full speed over the hills, with the dauntless old man on his back, was continually to be seen, and the British learned to dread his reappearance in their front and the report of his trusty musket."

With the story of Winchester's pale horse and pale rider, like Tolkien's "Lord of the Rings," so ends part two of this capsule history of Waterfield-Black Horse Village-South Woburn-Winchester.

Chapman's History of Winchester has proved so fine an example of local history, that its fascinations have so far taken us only to the Revolution, rather than to conclusion.

Because of this, and as a kind of unexpected tribute to the excellence of his work and the poignance of the author's passing (he died just 10 days after the history was published) the story of Winchester will have to continue to conclusion in an unprecedented third part next time.

MOVIE REVIEWS Rochelle Flynn Star Trek IV Short Takes

Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home Starring William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley, Catherine Hicks. Directed by Nimoy. Produced by Harve Bennett. Screenplay by Steve Meerson, Peter Krikes, Bennett, Nicholas Meyer. Rated PG (profanity).

When the crew of the starship Enterprise travels back in time to the 20th century in a broken-down Klingon ship, they aren't just trying to save their own world from destruction, but are participating in the first ever Save the Whales comedy.

That's right. Star Trek IV is not only the best installment in the series, it's the funniest. Director Leonard Nimoy, who also stars as Spock, cut his teeth on Star Trek III: The Search for Spock and has far surpassed his last effort.

The crew discovers that a space probe, which is wreaking havoc on the environment, is emitting whale-like sounds. Well, there aren't any whales in the 23rd century, having been extinct by the 21st. Hence the time-travel back to a San Francisco in which people still use money, curse words and, according to a cranky Dr. McCoy, (DeForest Kelley) medical science is in the Dark Ages.

No one, of course, blinks at the crew in their Robinhood-like outfits and Spock in his Vulcan bathrobe. But the laughs really abound when these truly modern people have to deal with such mundane necessities as public transportation.

The only problem is that the writers never explain where the probe came from or why it was there in the first place. However, this is such an enjoyable flick and the special effects are so good that they can be forgiven. After all, how can you hold a grudge against a writing team that allows Spock to use a Vulcan mind-meld with a whale in an underwater tank. Or that lets Scotty beam the crew up to the ship in a spray of pretty, orange particles. This is the stuff for which Trekkies dream.

Nutcracker, the Motion Picture Starring Hugh Bigney, Vanessa Sharp, Patricia Barker, Wade Walthall. Directed by Carroll Ballard. Produced by Willard Carroll, Donald Kushner, Peter Locke, Thomas L. Wilhite. Rated G.

One always has reservations when one form of entertainment is adapted to another medium, in this case a filmed ballet. It isn't just the loss of intimacy with the production, but a filmed version of a stage presentation doesn't always allow the audience an overall view of the show.

"The Nutcracker" has always been the sugar-coated sacred cow of the ballet world. You can travel to a dozen different cities and see the same basic performance, complete with whirling dervishes, waltzing flowers and a growing Christmas tree. It's not particularly logical, but it is pretty.

In 1983, the Pacific Northwest Ballet premiered a new version of this old chestnut, using designs by Maurice Sendak ("Where the Wild Things Are") and a more logical storyline that deals with a girl on the brink of womanhood, and isn't just about young Clara's dreams.

However, translating this colorful, highly successful ballet to film is another story, and director Carroll Ballard (The Black Stallion) didn't miss the pitfalls. There are far too many scenes in which we see bits and pieces of bodies instead of an entire dancer. This is especially annoying when Maia Rosal is strutting and preening as a graceful peacock, and the camera continuously cuts away to her face. Or when the corps de ballet is performing, and Ballard focuses on one dancer.

Therefore, as imaginative as the production is, and as aesthetically pleasing as the London Symphony Orchestra's interpretation of Tchaikovsky's music is, this is one Nutcracker in which the magic is missing.

co-star Louis Gossett Jr., find themselves trapped in a story that takes on comic book proportions about mid-way. Rated PG. * 1/2

The Wrath which stars many sons and daughters of the rich and famous, gives the old boy meets girl, boy loses girl, boy gets girl romance a new twist by mixing in a little horror, violence and fast moving cars. It's the kind of movie that gives Grade B pictures a good name. Rated PG-13. * *

An American Tail is an adorable story about an immigrant mouse named Fievel who's lost in the Big Apple of 1885. Many of the jokes can be enjoyed by the adults on a more sophisticated level than the kids, but no one is going to rave about the animation, which is generally flat and uninspired. Rated G. * * *

Song of the South features stories by Uncle Remus, animation by Disney, cute kids and a heart-warming story. Need anything more be said? Rated G. * * * *

True Stories is a kind of like looking at a Norman Rockwell painting through a kaleidoscope. David Byrne, lead singer of the Talking Heads, wanders through Virgil, Texas as the citizens prepare for their Celebration of Specialness, commenting on people who could have come from any one of a dozen supermarket tabloid stories. Unfortunately, the joke starts to wear thin at the half-way mark. Rated PG. * * 1/2

The Mission, which won the Golden Palm at the Cannes Film festival this year, is an esthetic masterpiece filmed in the light and shadow of South American jungles. And, while the story of the slaughter of the Indians for the sake of land treaties in the 18th century has a remarkable and tragic ending, it lags about mid-way through, detracting from the overall splendor of the film. Rated PG. * * *

Streets of Gold may be hybrid of Rocky and The Karate Kid, but Klaus Maria Brandauer so overcomes its general triteness that this boxing story is worth seeing. Rated R. * * 1/2

Short Takes

Solarbabies takes place in an Orwellian future where water is bartered like gold and a band of wholesome roller skating orphans are destined to save the world. While the characters, acting and basic idea are all good, the movie skips around with new elements so illogically added that silliness prevails. Rated PG-13. * *

Otello lends itself more to the screen than you'd expect, no doubt because of director Franco Zeffirelli's deft use of light, shadow and color. The one drawback in this production of the Verdi opera is that the dubbing was obviously made for a soundtrack, not a film, so creaks and crunches sound extraordinarily loud and unintentionally funny. Rated PG. * * *

Firewalker was supposed to be a stretch for Chuck Norris as he tackled humor and adventure in the same movie as they search for a lost treasure of gold. Unfortunately, he and

Basketree celebrates first great year in Melrose with open house

MELROSE — Basketree celebrates its first anniversary on Dec. 7 with a joyous open house. The shop has been cheerfully decorated inside and out for the holidays. Hot mulled cider and festive goodies will be served. According to owner Roberta Gallagher, this is Basketree's way of saying "Merry Christmas" and thanks for a great first year to the many friends and customers who have helped the business grow.

The concept for the business was formulated about a year and a half ago when owner Roberta Gallagher began putting together gift baskets in a spare room of her home. "I knew the idea was good, but I didn't expect such wonderful customer support. A remarkable percentage of our new business comes from customer referral. The company now does as many baskets per day as it did per month when Ms. Gallagher was working out of her home. This remarkable growth is due, the owner feels, to the personal referral of many satisfied customers and to the accessibility of the lovely showcase shop located on Main St. in Melrose.

"The shop gives customers a chance to view the wide assortment of products and to see the quality of the items we include in each basket," says Ms. Gallagher.

Basketree's shop also carries a wide range of gift items, cards, giftwrap, wreaths and gourmet food items which can be purchased individually. The shop has gift baskets which are ready to give; it is not always necessary to order in advance.

Assisting Ms. Gallagher in the creative area is Jeanne Hanson of Stoneham and Vinette Bowe of Melrose. Both women bring a wealth of artistic skill to the arrangements.

Ms. Hanson also designs many of the store displays and does some of the purchasing for the shop.

One of the most valued services of the business is the delivery to homes, offices, and hospitals.

Basketree emphasizes careful, courteous and reliable delivery. This service is guaranteed by Mr. Ray Stiles of Wakefield. As Ray says, "It's wonderful, the joy and happiness the friend or loved one feels when we deliver our customer's basket selection."

All workers at Basketree would agree — Basketree is in the "happiness" business.

AARP plans luncheon

It will be a festive Holiday Luncheon for the members of Chapter No. 1124 of AARP, Inc., who are gathering for sociability and sustenance on Friday, Dec. 12, at the Hillview Country Club on North Street in North Reading. The social hour is 11:30 a.m. and luncheon will be served at 12:30 p.m. with President Carolyn Norton of Melrose presiding. The Rev. Frederic Brightman, interim rector of the Melrose Highlands Congregational Church will give the invocation and grace.

The program is a demonstration of line dancing given by Connie Hanson of Nahant and her group. This is what members really like to participate in, and do!

Tickets at $11.00 are still available for this luncheon. Call the Treasurer, Kay Kennedy at 322-7313 immediately and put your request in with her, and send a check made out to Melrose Chapter No. 1124, AARP, Inc. with a self-addressed and stamped envelope to her at 192 Kennedy Drive, Apt. 404, Malden, Mass. 02148.

For those needing directions to the Hillview, North Street is off Route 28, taking a right turn from the highway, about a mile in on the left.

Melrose Chapter No. 1124 is a regional unit of AARP, and cities included on their roster are: Melrose, Malden, Lynnfield, Wakefield, Stoneham and Reading. However, members from Woburn, Saugus and Wilmington, and recently even Middleton are also joining our ranks.

Meetings are held on the second Friday of each month, September through June, at the Melrose Highlands Congregational Church, 355 Franklin St., Melrose. If there is no school in Melrose, there will be no AARP meeting. New members and guests are always welcome. Call Helen Fazio, Membership Chairman, at 438-3473 for further information about joining the chapter.

THEATER REVIEW

'Biloxi Blues' is 'good theater'

By JIM HAGGERTY

In the parlance of show business, "Biloxi Blues" at the Shubert Theater in Boston is "good theater."

Scheduled to run at the Shubert through Dec. 13, this second of Neil Simon's autobiographical trilogy provides solid theater for the holidays.

Simon takes the well-worn theme of a World War II soldier but turns Private Eugene Morris Jerome into a multi-faceted individual who is still trying to sort out his young private life amidst the confusion of a world-wide conflict. At times, Simon makes the barracks in Biloxi, Mississippi seem like a world-wide conflict as Jerome and his fellow soldiers try to figure out life in one felled swoop — a time of anxiety for everyone.

Jerome is played by a still youthful William Ragsdale, who is very believable because of the innocence that's written across his face. It's Ragsdale who's the center of attention as he loses this innocence but it's Andrew Polk, portraying Pvt.

period. "Biloxi Blues" follows "Brighton Memoirs" and will be followed by "Broadway Bound" in Simon's three plays. The flow of events through this second effort is effortless on the part of the Boston troupe and the lines are all there for an enjoyable evening for theater-goers.

William Ragsdale
Private Jerome

"If you didn't have any problems, the day would be over by 11 a.m.," advises Epstein at one point. And, it's a contest between Pvt. Epstein and a veteran serviceman, John Finn (Sgt. Merwin J. Toomey) that allows for the inevitable: the crush by the Army sergeant to mold everyone to a group and Epstein's stubborn resistance to lose his identity. In the end, it's Sgt. Toomey heading for the VA hospital and the "blue robe set" while Epstein's fate is explained as "missing in action" in Europe ... but no one really believes it.

For Ragsdale (Pvt. Jerome), his role in "Biloxi Blues" was his first on Broadway. The play quickly captured a 1985 Tony Award. Ragsdale is so comfortable in the role that he could spend a tour of duty with "Biloxi Blues" for a longer period than Hawkeye in MASH.

"It was my first day in the Army and so far I hated everyone," intones Pvt. Jerome at the outset. His interpersonal relationship with all types, including the extremes of young womanhood, reinforces his insecurity with the world of 1943.

Pvt. Toomey's un-lofty goals were similar to many GIs who ventured to southern training camps during the period. He very much wanted to stay alive, to write a little (he kept a diary) and to experience some of life's pleasures, such as a love affair and a sojourn to the local bordello. With great trepidation, Pvt. Toomey manages to survive it all, including the basic training and the barracks life.

Jerome, like Epstein, is the Jewish kid from New York who comes to grips with life's problems in different ways. Jerome goes the basic route only to be confounded by life's complexities; Epstein has already figured out the complexities of life figured but finds out that deep thinkers can get into a lot of trouble in the Army's simplistic world.

Complimenting Jerome and Epstein in the cast are four other members of the squad, whose barrack antics and salty conversations need only three "double racks" (beds) as props. Much of the dialogue takes place against the traditional two-story barrack structures so typical of the period. Still, without really any need for exotic props, "Biloxi Blues" flows smoothly with attention on the six recruits and their sergeant. The mixing of a trollop from Gulfport and a Catholic girlfriend from the same locale only adds to Jerome's problems and the situations of the play.

Andrew Polk
Private Epstein

Arnold Epstein, a street-wise and book-wise New Yorker, who puts the play over the top.

Ragsdale, who is just 25, seems much younger to this Boston audience, as he narrates portions of "Biloxi Blues" to provide a nice continuity to a play set on a train ride from New York and back with 10 weeks of basic training in between. A basic understanding of the world is also force-fed to Pvt. Jerome in a similar short

Woodchips

By ANTHONY MANCONI

Fr. Robert Burns, manager of the Woburn Elks, is the father of eight wonderful children. Not long ago, Bob was afraid to come home from work and ask his lovely wife Martha, "What's new?" At a recent social event at the Elks, Jimmy Quinn introduced me to a gentleman as "the Woodchipper." "Well," the man responded, "I finally met the 'wierdo' who writes that stupid column called Woodchips!" I didn't have anything to worry about with my friends Bill McGarr, Jack Keane and Leo Boissonault nearby. "Tell me," the man asked, "why is it that everyone you mention in your column is either great, wonderful or beautiful? Aren't there any other kind in the Middlesex East area?" "John," I said, "if you were to pick a bouquet of roses in a flower garden, you would certainly choose the most beautiful available. I can't imagine you putting in a few thorns, burrs or weeds. The people I mention every week are to me like a bouquet of beautiful flowers. As I get to meet more and more of them each day I am proud to include them in Woodchips."

My wife Kathy advised our new neighbor, Christine Griffin, who had purchased a new kitchen range, "Make sure the stove is set level, otherwise the food you cook won't 'burn' evenly." That's why I look like I have a tan all year round, I'm eating "burnt" food. Some dear ladies will hate me for this chip, but here goes. Is your house a "home" or a "museum?" Are all members of the family allowed to sit in any chair in your living room, or are you treated like "mummies" who got a "burn wrap?" My Aunt Nina's living room is "out of bounds" because it's being saved for "special" company. "Baloney!" It's better by far to have things "wear" out than "rust" out. In my house every chair is available to sit in, every floor or rug is there to be walked on, nothing is spared and everything is there to be "used." We don't reserve anything for special company because there isn't anyone more special than our own family members.

"City Hall," said a sweet melodious switchboard lady's voice. "Is this really City Hall?" asked a nervous unbelieving woman. "Yes it is, with whom do you wish to speak?" "Oh, no one I guess, you see I found this number on a slip of paper in my husband's coat pocket." Now my wife Kathy would never do that. How do I know? Well I've planted many slips of paper with fictitious names on them and I know she's seen them. "Why aren't you jealous?" I asked one day. She smiled and said, "because our marriage was for better or worse. You couldn't have done any 'better,' and I couldn't have done any 'worse.'" Mark Aloisi asked the card shop clerk in Reading Square, "Have you any cards that say 'I have love for only you?'" "Yes," "Good," Mark replied, "I'll have five please."

John Shea told his buddy, Rowan Fitzgerald, that he read so much about the evil of drinking that he decided to give up "reading." His grandfather fell into a mixing vat in a brewery and was drowned. He was cremated and the fire burned for six days. He sure had a lot of spirit.

Woodchips proudly congratulates Stoneham High School senior, Kristen Seabury, who won the state Cross Country Championship recently. Kristen is not only a great athlete, but is as pretty as a picture and has an outstanding personality. The only runners in my family were on the sled we all shared called "Flexible Flyer."

My friend Wally Hill started working after graduating from high school for Mass Electric as a meter reader. Those were the days when he had to go down rickety cellar stairs, climb over storage trunks, hit his head on a low beam and finally get to the corner where the meter was located. With ten years of training like that is it any wonder that Wally won the company "100 Meter Race" every year? Tommy Cook is proficient in the 100 yard dash but somehow can't get up the go power to walk out with the trash.

The Idaho Potato Growers Association cancelled their invitation to have Walter Cronkite speak at their annual convention when they discovered that Walter was a "Common-Tater."

The opera isn't over until the fat lady sings. I love Italian operas because most of them have the same plot, making it easy to follow. Here's one I saw last night. Torredo comes home to "unwind" after a hard day's work as a "watchman" at a "clock factory." He is "alarmed" when he finds that his wife Santuzza has been "two timing" him. Without a "second" to lose he "springs" into action because it's "crystal clear" what has been going on. He goes center stage and sings a tender tenor aria saying: "although I'm getting old and a little 'run down' and the 'ticker' is kind of weak, I love you more than ever." She "waddles" over to him and they sing a duet as the curtain falls on yet another great Italian opera.

Since the dawn of creation man has looked up to the stars for guidance, always wondering to this day if there are other forms of intelligent beings somewhere in space. Louis O'Malley asked "Woodchipper, do you believe in UFO's?" "Of course not," I replied. "Do you believe in 'flying saucers?'" "After last night at my house I certainly do." "Don't tell me you sighted one?" "More than one. It all started when my wife Kathy said, 'look at me I have the 'body' of a nineteen year old girl.'" My words, "you better give it back, you're getting it all wrinkled," started a fusillade of our best dishes being thrown at me and I luckily deftly dodged them all except for a coffee cup that hit me on the right ear."

Joanne Coelho said to me; "Woodchipper it was so cold this morning I saw a chicken walking with a 'capon.'" "I know it was cold," I told her, "I saw a 'bumblebee' with a

'yellowjacket.'"

Arthur DeSantis and his lovely wife Jo are new readers of Woodchips. Arthur manufactures "hosiery." I hope he doesn't "sock" it to me when he sees his name in print. I also welcome, Sal Armata, a chef in a local restaurant where a cook went "stir crazy."

Christmas at Pinewood Garden

NORTH READING — The Christmas Season is off to a fantastic start at Pinewood Garden with exciting happenings every day for the whole family. An Open House was held Sunday, Nov. 30, with festivities for all in attendance, including refreshments, a live petting animal zoo in "the corral," animated displays everywhere, and fun for all ages.

Pinewood Garden has one of the largest displays of natural Christmas Trees including acres of Balsam, Scotch Pine and Douglas Fir with thousands of plain or decorated wreaths, miles of live roping both simple and exotic, as well as gorgeous poinsettias, Christmas cactus, and numerous unusual plants and arrangements.

This year, Pinewood's creative team is having craft workshops so you can create your own mantel displays, door decorations, wreaths, etc. The supply of craft items is overwhelming, from ribbon to ornaments, and allows the individual to be as original as he/she wishes, but with an expert to assist, if needed.

The high schools of the area will be having their own "Tree Nights" where Pinewood Garden has graciously agreed to donate $2 for every tree sold that specific evening to the designated school's charity of their choice.

North Andover High School's Tree Night is Wednesday, Dec. 3, from 5 to 9 p.m., Reading High School's Tree Night is Thursday, Dec. 4, from 5 to 9 p.m., North Reading High's Tree Night is Monday, Dec. 8, from 5 to 9 p.m., and Andover High's Tree Night is Wednesday, Dec. 10, also between 5 and 9 p.m. There will be representatives from the respective schools to greet the public these evenings.
